MULE OF TEXAS.

Mule of Texas, ere we part,
Tell me why you will not start
Or, if really you must balk,
Pray excuse my wicked talk.
Hear my vow, before I go,
I'll be even with you, though.

By your [illegible] tail uncombed,
Tossed by every passing wind;
By those heels, so wondrous swift,
Which can men o'er tree-tops lift;
By those ears that droop so low,
I'll be even with you, though.

By those ribs I long to baste,
By your show of [illegible] taste,
By the melancholy bray
That alarms folks miles away,
By your [illegible] to whack,
I'll be even with you, though.

Mule of Texas, I am gone;
Think of me, sweet, when alone,
For I fly to get a club,
Then your blamed old back I'll drub,
If I cannot make you go,
I'll be even with you, though.

BEAR SHOOTING IN CANADA

The forest we had entered was a dense grove of cedars, mixed with spruce and pine. The trees stood close together, with low branches, and were plentifully interspersed with windfalls, lying breast-high on rotten branches, and forming an admirable natural abatis against our advancing column of two armed with ax and shot-gun.

George moves on like a shadow straight for the squirrel that still chatters and scolds and swears from the depths of the cedar jungle. I veer to the right. We worm ourselves between the thick trunks, and under the thicker branches.

A low "Sh!" catches my ear. I turn toward George. "Here he is!" is written all over his face. He points directly ahead, then shakes his ax, and points and points again.

I look, stretch up and look, crouch down and look, but see nothing save the tree-trunks.

George grows impatient. He thinks I do not understand him.

"Le voici! Here he is'" he hisses. But Bruin hears as well as I. "Non le voila! There he goes!"

I hear a whine and a grunt that remind me of a menagerie, and through the thick cedar trunks and the dead branches of a fallen pine catch a flitting glimpse of shambling blackness.

I fire a snap shot, as I would at a woodcock darting through the alder tops. The smoke hangs under the thick branches and shuts out all before me.

"He's down! Nous l'avons!" yells George. The report of the gun has broken the spell of the forest silence, and George changes from a serpent to a tiger.

"No," he cries; "he's off again. Fire!"

I fire my left barrel through the smoke with the "eye of faith," and, cramming in a couple of fresh cartridges, George and I rush on, if any mode of progress through a tangled cedar swamp can be called a rush. We kick and wrest off the dry dead branches, scramble over the fallen pine; but the bear! Nowhere a sign of him. Nothing but forest and silence.

George keeps on; I do my best to follow. He glides along like a cat, in one hand an uplifted ax, descending now and then to sever an opposing bough. He gets over the ground two feet to my one.

"Le voila, qui s'en va! There he goes again! Venez! Come on!" cries George; and I perform the speediest coming on of which I am capable. Slow enough it is, though. Every few steps the tangled branches of a fallen cedar must be burst through, but on I press and scramble and tumble and crawl till George is reached. He stands on a prostrate tree, ax upraised, head bent forward and to one side—an admirable statue of alertness.

"Ecoutez! Listen!" he whispers.

A moment's stillness. Then a crackling, loud and near, up the hillside. George jumps through the thicket, and speeds up the slope like a flash.

Follow him? I could as easily flit up to heaven without wings. So I scramble on through the level swamp. It is said "blood will tell;" I can swear that weight will. The burden of my 200 pounds handicapped me in this swamp race with a bear. Every thicket I crawled through, every windfall I scrambled over, told on me, till at last I was forced to halt. With perspiration bursting from every pore, and breath only caught in gasps, I leaned against a tree, and imagined the feelings of the losing horse in a race. My heart beat loudly as the drumming of a partridge, the whole forest seemed to reverberate with its quick thud, thud, thud, and the blood leaped to head and temples till my brain was in a whirl.

While the trees were dancing before my reeling sight I thought, "What an unlucky wight am I! After twenty years of small-game shooting, to at last actually meet a bear in his haunts in the forest, get within thirty yards of him, on the point of gratifying one of the pet ambitions of my life, and then to bang away a couple of shots like a fool with the buck ague, while my noble quarry coolly makes off, and I am left empty-handed!"

Worse than that, the brute runs away so slowly that George sees him again and again—keeps up with him, in fact. Alas, my "too, too solid flesh!" Were I a light, nimble fellow like George, I might have shot a bear—yes, a half-dozen times over. And then my gun. What a fool, to bring a little snipe-gun into the woods in quest of the king of the forests, the beast before which all others quail from the Atlantic to the Mississippi, and then to fire away at this lordly game as I would pull trigger on a woodcock! One bird missed, up flips another. But where shall I find another bear, when I have been all my life getting up with this first one? Then, if I had only shot him, what yarns I would spin to my sporting friends—

"Le voici encore! Here he is again!" sounded George's voice, loud and clear, through the forest, and cut short my reverie.

My heart thrilled and my brain steadied in an instant. Again I sprung forward. "I may get him yet; I may retrieve my fortunes," thought I, as I dragged, crawled and pushed myself ahead through the underbrush.

George hears me crashing along, and shouts from the mountain side: "He's makin' down by the lake. Right ahead o' yer. Look out for him."

I scramble on, impelled by one single, strong desire—to get one good, fair shot at that bear.

I keep on and on. Not a word from George. At my right, through the leaves, I catch bright glimpses of the lake, sleeping in the sunlight. I slacken my pace. All is silent as a sanctuary. "Well, the bear is off, and George with him. I'll keep on slowly, cool off, and perhaps get my 'second wind' that we read about, whatever that may be." So thinking, I sling myself upon a fallen cedar that lay breast-high across my route, swing my legs over, sit and rest for a moment, then leisurely drop down on the other side.

"Knar-r-r-r-r!" And from under a cedar, only seven paces away, a mass of blackness springs for me, sudden and swift.

I have not time to take a step. Had time allowed, there is no opportunity. The fallen cedar is at my back; I am pinioned between its branches. But no thought of retreat or dodging enters my mind. There is time but for one single impulse, and that is—shoot! My gun is in my right hand, both barrels full cock. Instantly I pitch it to my shoulder, yet in this instant the whole forest scene, with the on-dashing, black brute in the center, is accurately and indelibly photographed on my sight. I see the beast leaping on all fours, hind-quarters high, fore-shoulders low, head down and askew, snout turned to right, lip curled up like a snarling dog, teeth chattering, and black eyes gleaming with a devilish light. On comes the monster with his vibrating, grunting growl, Knar-r-r-r-r! As the gun swings up to my face I glance along the barrels, and see the snapping teeth of the leaping brute within four feet of my gun-muzzle. I fire. The beast falls forward with a heavy thud at my feet.

I lower my gun, and, with finger on the left trigger, press the muzzle against the monster's head. He moves not. Every fiber of my being thrills with a wild, intense delight.

"Dead!" I yell, with savage glee.

And from up the mountain-side comes George's answering shout, "Bravo, mon frere!"

And now comes George himself, crashing and bounding down the steep and swinging his ax aloft. He jumps over our fallen foe, embraces me, dances about like a true Frenchman, shouting, "Bravo, mon frere! bravo, mon frere! Nous avons vaincu notre ennemi. Sacre! You old black devil, you! Voici—here you are, mort. Aha!" and grasping me with both hands words fail us, and we give voice to the wild joy of victory in one long "Halloo!" that wakes the slumbering echoes of the summer lake. The veneer of 1,000 years of civilization dropped from us like a garment, and the original savage, the fighting animal, the true man within, laughed with a zest that civilization knows not of.

Jim hears our shout from down the lake, catches its meaning, gleefully halloos in reply, and paddles swiftly to us in the pirogue.

"Here he is, Jim," quoth I. "Voici l'ours."

Jim peers over the shaggy brute, looks up, takes off his hat, and, bowing toward me, says, with the air of a diplomat offering a sentiment at a royal banquet, "C'est bien bon, monsieur, beaucoup de gloire a votre bras, et meme plus a votre fusil."

Taking Bruin by the paws, we slid her down the bank.

"She'll weigh about four hundred," said Jim, reflectively, as we lifted her into the pirogue. "But then they're dreadful lean in summer. Late in the fall, now, she'd go another hundred sure."—Harper's Magazine.

HOW A NEW BONNET STOPPED AN AVALANCHE ON WHEELS.

Col. Fizzletop took his wife out for a drive. He was driving a very high-spirited horse, when it occurred to Mrs. Fizzletop that she would like to drive that kind of an animal. She remarked:

"I have often heard you say, Colonel, that a woman did not know how to drive. Now I want to show you how badly mistaken you are. Give me the reins."

"Not with this buggy," replied Fizzletop, trembling all over. "I know you can drive splendidly, but wait until to-morrow, and I'll borrow an old second-hand buggy from a friend for you to practice with. I saw where a woman in Galveston smashed up a new buggy, so that it cost $40 to repair it so that it could be used for kindling wood. Let us keep this buggy to go to our funerals in."

"So you think I can't drive this horse?"

"I know you can drive well enough, but before going down the avenue let's drive back and kiss the children and your mother good-by, and then go over to the marble yard and pick out a tombstone, and then down to the undertaker and get measured, and then—"

"Out to the lunatic asylum and leave you there for awhile. You are talking like you didn't have good sense."

"All right. Just take the reins and give the people a chance to fresco the wheels with their brains."

"You are in no danger of losing any brains. Get up!" said Mrs. Fizzletop, as she took the lines.

"How polite the people are to get out of the way," she remarked, as the near wheels scraped the bosom of a flying drummer's pants, the end of one of the shafts knocked the hat off the head of a prominent banker, while a life-insurance agent was acting as a brake for the off-wheel, without his intending it at all.

Just at this moment, when Fizzletop had given up all hopes, just as the buggy was about to telescope a street car full of passengers, just as the drivers of other teams were whipping up their teams to escape from the Fizzletop avalanche on wheels, Mrs. Fizzletop saw a new hat in a store window, and, in spite of the frantic efforts of the frenzied animal, held him as in a vise until Fizzletop had purchased the hat, and thus the danger was averted. When a lady has made up her mind to have a new bonnet, two locomotives cannot pull her past the store window.

THE SHADOWS ON THE GRAVES.

In China ancestors are held in peculiar reverence. The Chinese look upon the casting of a shadow over an ancestor's grave as an insult, and resent it with impetuous anger. Chinese ancestors are buried, not in large cemeteries, but in the family burial-grounds. As China is thickly inhabited, the result is that an ancestor's bones may be found resting beneath every few rods of turf. Hence a novel cause of trouble to a telegraph company in that country. The company erected poles on which to hang the wires. The poles and wires cast necessarily more or less of a shadow. Every Chinaman on whose ancestor's grave a shadow rested forthwith arose in his wrath and cut down the poles. The consequence has been, as a matter of economy and self-protection the company has placed the wires underground. Reverence for the dead in China has accomplished what regard for the comfort and safety of the living has as yet been unable to accomplish in this country.

JUDGE DAVIS, acting Vice President of the United States, owing to his being a Senator and chosen President pro tem. from that body, receives part of his salary at the treasury, and part is paid by the Secretary of the Senate. His pay as Senator, $5,000, is paid by the Secretary, the balance, $3,000, at the treasury.

CHEERFUL NON-GIVERS.

Mr. A., a vestryman of —— parish, listened to a missionary statement of the work of a new mission in a destitute neighborhood. "It's a good work," said he, "a very good work. I'll give $1 to help it on." The next day Mr. A. went on a pleasure trip to a distant city, stopped at a first-class hotel, and rode around to see various parts of interest. The trip cost him $100.

Miss B. took out of her purse 50 cents to buy some coal for a poor widow's family in a back street, but left in the other compartment of the purse a $10 bill that was to be used for buying some trimming for a new dress.

Mrs. C. was very much interested in paying off the church debt. She finally concluded that she could afford to give $10; but, finding that the ring she was about purchasing was more expensive than she first thought, changed her gift to the church to $5. The other $5 went to help pay for the ring.

Dr. D. told the committee who called upon him that he really could not give more than 50 cents each week toward the rector's salary. He thought $25 a year a very generous allowance for him; but he sent home the same day a few ornaments, for which his wife was puzzled for house-room. The ornaments cost $25.

The roof of the parsonage leaked badly, and the clergyman reported that the health of his family was suffering from the dampness thus occasioned throughout the house; but the people were so slow in repairing it that the winter was one of great discomfort to the clergyman's family. During the winter the rector was invited to five parties given by his parishioners, the expense of which would have put the dilapidated rectory in complete repair.—Pacific Churchman.

WHERE IS THE ABBE?

Before the French revolution there were many ecclesiastics known as the abbes. They were without office or duty, and picked up, as they were poor, a meal here and there, among the charitable. At the houses of the principal nobleman there was usually a plate left for some chance abbe who might drop in at dinner time.

At that hour it was no uncommon sight to see the abbes picking their way from one nobleman's house to another. Rapping at the gate, the hungry ecclesiastic would inquire of the reporter, "Is there a vacant place?" If the answer was "No, monsieur," he would walk onward.

This custom will explain a story told by Rogers, the poet, which illustrates the horrors of the French Revolution. Just after it had broken out, a party was dining, one day, at a nobleman's house, and among them an abbe. While at dinner, the cart carrying those condemned to the guillotine went by.

All the company ran to the windows to see the horrid sight. The abbe, being a short man, tried in vain to peep on tiptoe. Determined to see, he ran down to the front door. His curiosity cost him his life, for, as the cart went by, one of the victims, knowing the abbe, bowed to him. The abbe returned the salutation.

"What! you are his friend?" exclaimed one of the guards. "Then you, too, are an aristocrat." "Away with him!" shouted the crowd, and the poor abbe was seized, thrust into the cart, and hurried to the guillotine.

The company, having satisfied their curiosity, returned to the table. "Where is monsieur, the abbe?" asked a guest, seeing a vacant place. No one could answer. He was already headless.—Youth's Companion.

THE HOLY GRAIL.

The Holy Grail was one of the leading themes of medieval romance, fabled to have been the cup or chalice used by Christ in the Last Supper, and in which He changed the wine into blood. This chalice, preserved by Joseph of Arimathea, had also received blood which flowed from the side of Christ on the cross. This is what the apocryphal gospel of Nicodemus says, but no early mention is made by either profane or ecclesiastical writers. In the twelfth century, at the dawn of romantic literature, it reappeared as the central subject of the prophecies of Merlin, and the object of the adventurous quest of the Knights of the Round Table. Romance mixed it up with the struggles in Spain between Moors and Christians, and with the foundation of the order of Templars in Palestine.

HENRY VILLARD declared in a speech at a reception in Portland that he will ride from New York to Oregon in October, 1883, over the Northern Pacific.

THE CULTURE OF FROGS.

The "frog who would a wooing go" is now a native of the great republic, and his matrimonial leap is taken across the broad waters which separate America from Europe. He descends from this stupendous saltatory exercise, not upon the unsympathetic shores of Britain, where his race is looked upon with disdain, and even aversion, but upon the hospitable and friendly shores of the new republic in France, where his kin has been appreciated warmly by gourmands of every class. The Figaro reports with much gusto the arrival of the distinguished strangers, who are to be introduced with due honor into the breeding establishments which supply the markets of the gay capital. The Yankee frog is quite worthy of the country in which his first mortal croak is made. He is twice as big as the well-known inhabitant of the marshes of the Seine, whose delicate limbs are so eagerly bought up by French epicures, and so daintily served to table by the cordons bleus of the Cafe Anglais and the Trois Freres. The precious consignment has been received by the frog breeders with unbounded joy, and it is anticipated that a skillful treatment of the new race will infuse fresh virtues into the stock of the frog ponds, so that in time, by a careful system of propagation, the legs of the croakers supplied to the French restaurants will rival in size the legs of chickens, which they are said to resemble in flavor, and it will no longer be necessary for the giver of a feast to sacrifice a holocaust of the expensive victims. It seems, however, that the new-comers are all of the ruder sex. The Yankee has come a-wooing, and "whether his mother would let him go or no" is still a doubtful point. But, at any rate, neither his mother nor his sister have accompanied him to Europe. He will be wedded to the wife or wives provided for him in the French grenouillieres, and we sincerely hope that he will "live happily ever afterward," and be the father of an increasing and interesting family of Franco-American croakers.—London Globe.

THE PRESERVATION OF NIAGARA.

The influence of nature is the healthiest influence which can affect mankind; objects of natural beauty and grandeur serve to elevate the understanding, to inspire the imagination, and to purify the heart; within the circle of their attraction the citizens of all countries meet, and thus the peace of the world is promoted. It is the duty of the nation possessing such objects to shield them forever from degrading influences and to hold them for the world's good.

The Falls of Niagara command a wider interest than any other of the wonders of nature; every year two hundred thousand people of all nations visit them; they constitute the most renowned American possession. They are being destroyed for purposes of private gain, and in a few years will have suffered to such an extent that restoration will be no longer possible. These circumstances furnish an imperative call for action and justify an appeal to the sentiment of the country—considerations of State pride and constitutional propriety indicate that the action should be taken by the State of New York. We are under distinct obligations to our descendants and to mankind to preserve Niagara and its influences; every moral and patriotic sentiment demands that we fulfill them. Should we neglect to do so posterity will justly scorn us, and every member of the decreasing throng of visitors will carry back the shameful information that America, the land destined beyond all question to be first in individual capacity and commercial prosperity, is last in true patriotism and has no care for moral worth.—Buffalo Express.

WOMEN'S PLAY-GROUND.

In general, the remark holds good of the female sex, that those think most who speak least—as frogs cease croaking when a light is placed on the banks of a pond. The habit of much talking among women is a result of their sedentary occupations. The little work-tables are play-grounds of women's fancies, and their knitting-needles are fairy wands, by which they transform a room into an isle of dreams; hence it is that a book distracts a woman in love more than four pairs of stockings knit by herself. Naturalists assert that the leaves of trees are in a fluttering motion in order to purify the air. It would be strange, indeed, if nature, who is thus economical, had ordained the vibration of the female tongue without a purpose. The moon has its ocean of water and woman's head its ocean of air to shake into health.

PATIENCE ripens the most difficult plans.

EXTINCTION OF GREAT BIRDS.

It is a noteworthy fact that some of the great birds most interesting to naturalists have become extinct, apparently within the memory of man, and even within two centuries. Of these birds, perhaps the most famous was the dodo (Didus ineptus), which was an inhabitant of the Mauritius island, and, at the time of its discovery, in 1598, it was extremely common; but so effectually has it been eradicated that it is now only represented by a few pictures of the seventeenth century, and two heads, a foot, a few feathers and some of its bones that are scattered about among the museums of Continental Europe. From the pictures above mentioned, and the descriptions of the early voyagers, it appears that this giant among pigeons was a large, bulky bird, weighing seventy-five pounds. Its bill was long and strong, and the upper part of the mandible was so horny, arched, hooked and ferocious in appearance that its discoverers for a long time considered it a ground vulture. Its body terminated in a rounded extremity, being destitute of true tail feathers, having a tuft of plumes to take the place.

From Madagascar we have the remains of eggs that were found among human implements that were a good lift for two men, and that, after being cut in two, were probably used as vessels for holding water, their capacity being several gallons. The hen that laid these monster eggs is unknown to science, but must have been a wondrous spectacle. Two other birds, the solitaire and nazarene, have also become extinct within the traditions of man. The former attained a weight of forty-five pounds, had feet and beak like a turkey, but in no other respects resembled the didus above mentioned. The plumage was of a browish-gray color, and, according to Legnat, they produced a noise like a rattle by fluttering their wings, which he says were enlarged at the extremity of the bone into a round knob like a musket ball. The nazarene had only three toes, and from its bones we judge that it was thrice as large as the didus.

Even as recently as fifty years ago a large bird, forty inches in length, called the great auk, was occasionally found as far south as Boston, and was quite common in the Arctic region. To-day not a single specimen is known to exist in the world, having become totally extinct, but by what means will always remain an enigma. Very few specimens of it are known, and only one skin is on exhibition in this country; this was purchased by a gentleman in New York at a cost of $750 in gold.

CATTLE RAISING IN SOUTH AMERICA.

The life of the cattle is wholly free. The stock-raiser, or estancier, is the owner of a very extensive tract of pasture land, and he leaves the animals to live upon it, to feed themselves, and multiply at their will. The stock, even in the wildest and least-populous regions, form small herds of from 100 to 150 head, which are made up of steers, cows, calves and bulls, but are always composed of the same individuals, and always inhabit the same very limited region of the campo, and the animals pass their lives within this region without being confined by any inclosure. The distinctive character of the groups is especially curious in the more populous regions, as the southern part of Rio Grande or Montevideo, where herds may be seen almost in contact without mixing, coming together and making themselves up generally without trouble, and they live thus side by side for years without becoming acquainted with each other. Each herd is so coherent that, when one of its members takes fright and turns away, all will follow it. In consequence of this habit, it is very difficult, when the cattle are sold, to separate them from the herds and to get them along for the first few leagues. If they are not watched, they will escape, pass by thousands of other animals without noticing them, and join their companions again.—Popular Science Monthly.

SCENE—A breakfast table. Paterfamilias (reading morning paper)—"Last night the cold was intense, the thermometer registering 4 degrees below freezing point. Now, children, I suppose you are taught all about that at school. Which of you can tell me what the freezing point is?" Charlie (aged 6)—"The point of my nose, papa."

WE are firm believers in the maxim that, for all right judgment of any man or thing, it is useful, nay essential, to see his good qualities before pronouncing on his bad.

According to the census returns in six of the Southern States the increase in population is equal to or above the average, while in the others it does not fall far below. Tennessee's gain has been twenty-three per cent., Alabama has 28, Louisiana 29, Georgia 30, North Carolina 31, Mississippi 38, South Carolina 41, Florida 44, and Arkansas heads the list with a gain of 66 per cent.

We learn from private correspondence that the negro man, who was placed in our county jail some three weeks since, under various charges, stole several articles of value, besides $8 in money from Mr. E. Lindsey, of Calera. When arrested, he had on female attire, and had been in the employ of Mr. Lindsey, and also of Mr. J. T. Wilson, at Strasburg, as a cook, and was giving his name as Martha Williams. It is probable that he assumed this disguise for the purpose of commiting some fiendish and nameless crime, and he should be dealt with to the full extent of the law.

PROSPECTIVE AND RETROSPECTIVE.

The year 1882 finds [illegible] farmers of the country poorer [illegible] they have been since the [illegible] days of 1864—the era of fire and blood. As far north as the [illegible] grass region of Kentucky, the cry has been "drouth and short crops." And in the great northwest the fiery element has almost been the prelude to famine. The great cereal State of Tennessee will be compelled to buy corn before another crop can be made. Here in Alabama, taking the State as a whole, the outlook is no better, if it is not really worse.

Our county seems to have been more favored than most other sections of the State. And even in the adjoining counties of Autauga, Montgomery and Dallas, on the south, and Bibb and Shelby, on the west and north, the farmers have been greater sufferers from the drouth than we have. But even in Chilton, the most rigid economy will have to be practiced, in order to "make both ends meet."

If the farmers of this county had last year planted in corn the land that was given to cotton, they would now be far better off; besides having enough for home consumption and the raising of meat, they could soon be selling at a good profit to less favored sections. It seems, however, to be an utter impossibility to induce the farmers of the South to take a retrospect of the past and profit thereby, notwithstanding the fact that the majority of them ackowledge, and know, that they are on the road to complete ruin in their present course. It is to be earnestly hoped that during the present year, and for all time hereafter, diversity of crops will be the motto; and if this is adhered to, the farmer may yet become independent of the mortgage and the money-lender.

A SPECIMEN FROM THE GITEAU TRIAL.

Tuesday morning, while the evidence was being taken, the prisoner undertook to read a letter as he claimed from an old friend of President Garfield, in Ohio, showing that public opinion was making in his favor

Judge Cox ordered him to be quiet.

Giteau—"It shows the state of public opinion outside this court room."

Judge Cox—"Be silent. Public opinion has nothing to do with this case."

Giteau—"When I speak I speak to 50,000,000 people; not to the little crowd in this Court room."

Marshal Henry rising and moving toward the dock—"Keep quiet sir."

Guiteau—"I've got through, sir."

The marshal whispered some instructions to the bailiff sitting in the dock.

A moment later the prisoner started upon another harangue, and the bailiff put his hand upon his shoulder and attempted to quiet him.

Giteau snarled out: "Get away from me or I will slap you in the mouth."

With this outburst he subsided and turned his attention to writing autographs.

It is understood that the defense in the Giteau case will shortly introduce a new feature. So-called "cranks," numbering between forty and fifty, have been arrested in Washington since Giteau shot the President, most of whom have been sent to St. Elizabeth Insane Asylum, on physician's certificates. The physicians in each case will, is is said, be subpœnaed for the purpose of comparing those cases with that of Giteau, with the view to demonstrating that if the concomitants referred to were justly made, Giteau must be likewise insane. John Giteau, brother of the prisoner, thinks Giteau will hang, sane or insane. He says the jury will not be out more than two hours before returning a verdict of conviction. Publicopinion, he says, is buildozing judge and jury.

THE SUN FOR 1882.

The Sun for 1882 will make its fifteenth annual revolution under the present management, shining, as always, for all, big and little, mean and gracious, contented and unhappy, Republican and Democrat, depraved and virtuous, intelligent and obtuse. The Sun's light is for mankind and womankind of every sort; but its general warmth is for the good, while it pours hot discomfort on the blistering backs of the persistently wicked.

The Sun of 1868 was a newspaper of a new kind. It discarded many of the forms, and a multitude of the superfluous words and phrases of ancient journalism. It undertook to report in a fresh, succinct, unconventional way all of the news of the world, omitting no event of human interest, and commenting upon affairs with the fearlessness of absolute independence. The success of this experiment was the success of THE SUN. It effected a permanent change in the style of American newspapers. Every important journal established in this country in the dozen years past has been modeled after THE SUN. Every important journal already existing has been modified and bettered by the force of THE SUN's example

THE SUN of 1882 will be the same outspoken, truthtelling, and interesting newspaper.

By a liberal use of the means which an abundant prosperity affords, we shall make it better than ever before.

We shall print all the news, putting it into readable shape, and meauring its importance, not by the traditional yardstick, but by its real interest to the people. Distance from Printing House Square is not the first consideratiom, with THE SUN. Whenever anything happens worth reporting we get the particulars, whether it happens in Brooklyn or in Bokhara.

In politics we have decided opinions; and are accustomed to express them in language that can be understood. We say what we think about men and events. That habit is the only secret of THE SUN's political course.

THE WEEKLY SUN gathers into eight pages the best matter of the seven daily issues. An Agricultural Department of unequalled merit, full market reports, and a liberal proportion of literary, scientific, and domestic intelligence complete THE WEEKLY SUN, and make it the best newspaper for the farmer's household that was ever printed.

Who does not know and read and like THE SUNDAY SUN, each number of which is a Golconda of interesting literature, with the best poetry of the day, prose every line worth reading, news, humor—matter enough to fill a good-sized book, and infinitely more varied and entertaining than any book, big or little?

If our idea of what a newspaper should be pleases you, send for THE SUN.

Our terms are as follows:

For the daily SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, post paid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty columns, the price is 65 cents per month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid,

The price of the Weekly SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free. Address I. W. ENGLAND, Publisher of The Sun, New York City.

CLANTON'S NEW YEAR BALL.

On last Monday evening the fancy dress ball, under the auspices of the ladies and gentlemen of Clanton, came off. Quite a number attended from a distance. Montevallo, Jemison and Verbena were each well represented, and the occasion was one of great enjoyment to all who were present. Much amusement was afforded by the unique and burlesque characters of the maskers, and gaiety reigned supreme till "the wee sma' hours."

To give the characters represented by the ladies: Probably the most beautiful costume was that of Miss M. D., representing "Night." Miss D. D., as "Minniehaha," was arrayed in another exquisitely beautiful costume, and well suited to the chararter. Miss A. G., the "Gay Young Widow," was a splendid representation of the widow without the weeds. Mrs. B. was another representation of "Night." Miss L. L., "Huntress," was a reminder of the famous Indian beauty, "Laughing Eyes." Miss McC., as "Snowflake," was arrayed in spotless white and was "the cynosure of all eyes." Miss M. H. took compassion upon the non-dancing proclivities of our editor, and represented the "Chilton View"—and a charming representative she made. Miss M. M., the "Gipsy Girl," Miss R. T., "Sunflower," and Mrs. H., the "Queen of H(e)arts," were the most graceful and artistic dancers present. Two of the most noteworthy characters were the "Indian Maidens," Misses Lilly Jones and Missy Boykin.

The gentlemen created a great deal of merriment by their grotesque and uncouth appearance, and upon the whole, the affair was a success in every particular. One of the gentlemen came out in the character of the "Ghost of John Barley Corn," as the result of Tuesday's election. Much credit is due Dr. I. D. Lanier, for suggestions and assistance in the selection of characters. Splendid music was furnished by Prof. Hall assisted by Messrs. Gullahorn and DeJarnette. Merrily went the music, and long will the occasion be remembered by all who attended. FELIX.

RAILROAD ACCIDENT.—Three box cars of the north bound freight train jumped the track, about one hundred yards below our depot, on Tuesday morning. They then ran against a trestle, which was completely wrecked, and one of the cars ditched. No one hurt. A negro brakeman was thrown from the top of one of the falling cars; he alighted on his feet, and came out unscathed. Supt. Marsh came down from Birmingham, and had the damage speedily repaired.

JEMISON JOTTINGS.

The past week has been very lively, the young people had a dance, at the residence of Mr. R. H. Gaines, on the evening of the 26th, and another at Mr. Allen Adkinson's new house, the 27th, and one at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Shelby the evening the 29th.

We are glad to learn that Mr. J. H. Hughes, who has been very sick for the past week, is improving.

We are glad to see that Mr. H. C. Lawhorn has commenced a new storehouse on Henry Street.

Mr. W. L. Bandy expects to be off to Florida soon.

Our citizens would be glad to hear that Clanton beat had voted whiskey out. Whiskey has not been sold in Jemison beat for 12 months, and we know the good of prohibition. EGO.

The Carrier's New Year's Address —TO THE PATRONS OF—

The Chilton View.

:o:

DEATH OF THE OLD YEAR.

Full many a hope lies buried in its dust,
Full many a joy has mouldered to decay,
While hearts that throbbed with love's confiding trust
Are still and dreamless 'neath the covering clay.

Its books are balanced and its debts all told;
A silent pensman silent record made
How for ambition, some, and some for gold,
Their pure integrity of heart betrayed.

It goes to judgment with its comrades past;
Its crimes are chronicled in human woes;
Its better deeds through coming time may last
To mitigate the sentence of its foes.

As to the tomb, we bear the last remains
Of some old withered centenarian gray,
Whose soul's been tossed with varying joys and pains,
Through many a sunny, many a cloudy day,

So to its grave, the Old Year we consign,
To rest forever with its kindred dead;
Its place, henceforth, is with the old-lang-syne,
While other years come trampling o'er its head.

How many a one the veteran now upbraids
—As he recalls the mournful parting knell—
Who bore, remorseless, to the eternal shades
Some friend that loved, was loved in turn so well.

Oh! ever thus, on Time's fast flowing stream,
The years go freighted with the heart's fond lore,
And fade as fade some half-forgotten dream,
Whose memory lingers dimly evermore.

BIRTH OF THE NEW YEAR.

But haste we to a more enlivening VIEW,
Where hope the siren songstress beckons on,
And quick, responsive to her sweet allure,
All nature gladly greets the New Year's dawn.

Let feast and frolic mark the opening day—
While flowers and sunshine e'er our pathway strew,
Unclouded pleasure hold despotic sway,
And life have many a coming bliss in VIEW.

There's one condition though which must be known,
A fact that all the world will see, is true,
The coming bliss is only to be won
By those who read and pay to read THE VIEW.

The same when wretched and forlorn, before,
They drank at our perennial fount, I knew;
But they subscribed and in each heart was born,
A wealth of joy—'twas plain to outward VIEW.

They read, and reading feel a wondrous change—
To march of time eternal youth ensue;
The ugly handsome grow, and still more strange,
One column read, e'en will a fool re-VIEW.

To what results this magic paper leads:
Miss Fannie Freckle comfort oft did sue,
When all at once her dark complexion cleared—
She found the wished for remedy in VIEW.

Tormented sadly in her back and legs,
Old mother Grimes was always in a stew,
To-day she dances on her healthy pegs,
Because she bought, believed and loved THE VIEW.

A man and wife who lived in our town,
Had many quarrels, but had pleasures few,
They took our paper, paid the money down,
And happy now, they ever bless THE VIEW.

Of all whose future fate's in any doubt,
'Tis said the Devil keeps a roll in blue.
A sinner's name is from that roll struck out
The very instant he doth take THE VIEW.

There's only one thing more my patrons all,
Can to your favored lot add pleasures new.
The Carrier's fee—fork up the wherewithal,
You know the needful must be kept in VIEW.

RULES FOR GOVERNING CHILDREN.

After all, I think there can be no harm in mentioning a few general principles laid down by my father. They are such as to commend themselves most to the most practical. And first for a few negative ones:

1. Never give in to disobedience, and never threaten what you are not prepared to carry out.

2. Never lose your temper. I do not say never be angry. Anger is sometimes indispensable, especially where there has been anything mean, dishonest or cruel. But anger is very different from loss of temper.

3. Of all things, never sneer at them; and be careful, even how you rally them.

4. Do not work on their feelings. Feelings are far too delicate things to be used for tools. It is like taking the mainspring out of your watch and notching it for a saw. It may be a wonderful saw, but how fares your watch? Especially avoid doing so in connection with religious things, for so you will surely deaden them to all that is finest. Let your feelings, not your efforts on theirs, affect them with a sympathy the the most powerful that it is ever found upon them; and, in order to do this, avoid being too English in the hiding of your feelings. A man's own family has a right to share his good feelings.

5. Never show that you doubt, except you are able to convict. To doubt an honest child is to do what you can to make a liar of him; and to believe a liar, if he is not altogether shameless, is to shame him.

6. Instil no religious doctrine apart from its duty. If it have no duty as its necessary embodiment, the doctrine may be regarded as doubtful.

7. Do not be hard on mere quarreling, which, like a storm in nature, is often helpful in clearing the moral atmosphere. Stop it by a judgment between the parties. But be severe as to the kind of quarreling and temper shown in it. Especially give no quarter to any unfairness arising from greed or spite. Use your strongest language with regard to that.

Now for a few of my father's positive rules:

1. Always let them come to you, and always hear what they have to say. If they bring a complaint always examine into it and dispense pure justice, and nothing but justice.

2. Cultivate a love of giving fair play. Every one, of course, likes to receive fair play, but no one ought to imagine, therefore, that he loves fair play.

3. Teach from the very first, from the infancy capable of sucking a sugar-plum, to share with neighbors. Never refuse the offering a child brings you, except you have a good reason, and give it. And never pretend to partake, that involves hideous possibilities in its effects on the child.

The necessity of giving a reason for refusing a kindness has no relation to the necessity of giving a reason with every command. There is no such necessity.

4. Allow a great deal of noise—as much as is fairly endurable; but the moment they seem getting beyond their own control stop the noise at once. Also put a stop at once to all fretting and grumbling.

5. Favor the development of each in the direction of his own bent. Help him to develop himself, but do not push development. To do so is most dangerous.

6. Mind the moral nature, and it will take care of the intellectual. In other words, the best thing for the intellect is the cultivation of the conscience, not in casuistry but in conduct. It may take longer to arrive, but the end will be the highest possible health, vigor and ratio of progress.

7. Discourage emulation, and insist on duty—not often, but strongly.—The Vicar's Daughter.

JOKE by a rich young gent [done at Newport between the second cigar and the fourth cobbler]: "If I had a bird, you know—a canary or cockatoo or something of the kind—and it should lose some of its tail feathers—no, hang it, I don't mean that—and it should break its wings—that's it—and get well again, why would it be like that old heathen fellow, Mercury? Because Mercury's heels are winged, you see, while its wings are healed! Good, isn't it?"

LIFE in Asia may have its attractions, but its perils are fearful. Leaving out of consideration the evils arising from overpopulation, and despotic government, the dangers are terrible. A tornado in the western section of Tonquin has just destroyed over 2,000 buildings, rendering many thousand persons homeless. In India last year only ten less than 22,000 persons fell victims to wild beasts or snake bites. In Bengal alone 859 persons were killed by tigers, and 1,061 by serpents. One would think Hindostan a good country to emigrate from.

DENTISTS say that the teeth grow worse with each generation.

"I MOVE," said a delegate in a Virginia convention, "that our chairman take a dose of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, he is so hoarse that I cannot understand him." That gentleman had no doubt tried this wonderful medicine.

NEAR Griffith, Ga., a rattlesnake eight feet long, as large as the calf of a man's leg, with thirteen rattles, chased a horse a quarter of a mile, striking at him all the time. The horse ran at the top of his speed, dragging a wagon with a little boy in it. The snake finally gave up the chase and was shot.

IN a Cincinnati daily we notice that Mr. Tim Gleeson, ex-member of the Council from the Fourth Ward of that city, says he suffered terribly with rheumatism all last winter and spring. He tried all kinds of liniments and medicines without any benefit until he used St. Jacobs Oil, the first application of which insured a full night's repose, and its subsequent use entirely cured him. It is a great remedy.—Akron (Ohio) Beacon.

ACCORDING to the last report of the United States Commissioner of Agriculture, it appears that 7,600,000 persons in the United States are engaged in agricultural pursuits. The total value of farms and farm implements is $13,461,200,433, or two-thirds of the productive wealth of the nation.

A Nocturnal Ramble and What Came of It.

Some genius—we suspect him to belong to the jovial order of humanity—has said: "The day to drone and dream; the night to roam and ramble." We do not propose to dispute this worthy's view of the matter, but present herewith the experience of a Philadelphia journalist, Mr. William H. Cunnington, 1712 North Seventieth Street, one of whose nocturnal rambles he thus refers to, beginning his narration rather peculiarly, however: "I am not a rheumatic, and have been troubled very little with bodily pains. Last Tuesday morning I experienced a very annoying stiffness of the neck, which grew worse as the day wore on. Toward evening it became very severe, and I could scarcely turn my head in any direction. Arriving home at tea time, it was with difficulty that I could eat my meal. My wife wanted to rub my neck with St. Jacobs Oil, but I refused, saying I thought the affliction would soon pass away. Tea over, against the remonstrances of my family, I left home to ramble toward the new Chestnut Street Opera House, about two and a-half miles from my residence. I started in the midst of a heavy snow storm, and remained at the theatre until the close of the performance, although I could feel my neck getting worse and becoming very painful. Leaving the play the trouble came to reach home. The storm continued; the car in which I was became blocked in nearly every square, a cold current of air swept through the car, and I did not reach home until toward 2 a. m., by which time my neck had become absolutely rigid. Then I consented to the use of St. Jacobs Oil, which my wife applied two or three times before I arose. I continued its use that day and by evening I was free from pain, and the next morning I amused myself by twisting my neck in any direction that suited me, and not a vestige of stiffness remained."—Boston Herald.

Snakes as Life Destroyers.

The loss of life in India due to the ravages of venomous snakes is almost incredible. Yet Consumption, which is as wily and fatal as the deadliest Indian reptile, is winding its coils around thousands of people while the victims are unconscious of its presence. Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" must be used to cleanse the blood of the scrofulous impurities, for tubercular consumption is only a form of scrofulous disease. "Golden Medical Discovery" is a sovereign remedy for all forms of scrofulous disease, or king's evil, such as tumors, white swellings, fever sores, scrofulous sore eyes, as well as for other blood and skin diseases. By druggists.

Increase and Decrease.

The census shows that the proportion of voters to the population is 1 to 5 74-100. The proportion of persons troubled with kidney and liver diseases has been alarmingly increasing, but since the almost universal use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure these diseases are rapidly diminishing.

Deprive a drunkard of his dram for three days and meanwhile give him plenty of Rock Spring Water, and he won't want the whisky. Don't you think it's worth trying it? If you do, drop a postal to Ellis & Co. It will cost only a cent.

A HORSE without hair is the latest curiosity, and the Zoological Garden at Moscow claims the wonder. It was sent from Turkestan by Gen. Kauffman. The color of the horse's skin is red, and his points are said to be admirable. He is, however, very sensitive to the cold, and has to be kept warm by thick woolen cloths.

REV. P. L. J. MAY, Rome, Georgia, says: "Though I had lost all faith in Asthma remedies, I concluded to try your Conqueror. A single dose relieved every symptom of Asthma. I have had Asthma seven years, and during the attacks could neither lie down nor sleep. Since I have been taking the Conqueror I can sleep all night." Address, CONE ASTHMA CO., Atlanta, Ga.

A RECENT visitor to Longfellow says that the poet is not so white from age as his portraits represent him. His hair and beard have dark lines, and his mustache has a tawny amber shade of the vanished chestnut of youth. His blue eyes are bright and his cheeks ruddy.

REV. J. W. KNOTT, Pastor Georgia Street, M. E. Church, South, Memphis, Tenn., writes: "As to the power and virtue of your medicine you can refer the world to me. I have seen the time when I would have given $100 for a bottle of it." To CONE ASTHMA CO., Atlanta, Ga.

NEITHER worth nor wisdom come without an effort, and patience and piety and salutary knowledge spring up and ripen from under the harrow of affliction.

REV. J. S. BRYAN, Pastor M. E. Church, South Palmetto, Ga., writes December 7th, 1881: "I have [illegible] experienced decided benefit from the use of your medicine." CONE ASTHMA CO., Atlanta, Ga., and Cin'ti, O.

FOR dyspepsia, indigestion, depression of spirits and general debility in their various forms, also as a preventive against fever and ague and other intermittent fevers, the FERRO PHOSPHORATED ELIXIR OF CALISAYA BARK, made by Caswell, Hazard & Co., New York, and sold by all druggists, is the best tonic; and for patients recovering from fever or other sickness it has no equal.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: "In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleeding of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half-dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with Diseased Lungs will take DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I can positively say it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness."

A REGULAR CIRCUS!

If there is one thing in all the world that allures the average boy and delights people generally, it is a well managed and thoroughly equipped circus. The children of a city or town seem to know of its coming by a kind of intuition, and prepare accordingly. The pennies, hitherto dropped into the missionary-box with conscientious regularity, are now faithfully diverted into an old coffee-pot in the cellar corner for prospective use, and scrap-metal, old paper, etc., do substantial service in the way of securing the amount of an admission fee. But for all that, we believe fully in the properly conducted circus as a means of amusement and diversion, and are happy to state the gratifying fact that the circus—or rather its proprietors and employes—experimentally believe in ST. JACOBS OIL, the Great Pain Reliever of the age. Hon. P. T. Barnum's Greatest Show on Earth and Coup's Monster Show can be taken as typical cases. The former says: "We take great pleasure in stating that ST. JACOBS OIL is in use by many ring artists now engaged with P. T. Barnum's Greatest Show on Earth, united with the Great London Circus, Sanger's Royal British Menagerie and the International Allied Shows. From its happy effect upon those who have occasion to employ it, we have no hesitation in pronouncing ST. JACOBS OIL the best liniment which has ever been brought to our notice. It is wonderfully efficacious in subduing pain.

(Signed) BARNUM, BAILEY & HUTCHINSON."

The Press Agent of Coup's Monster Show says: "In cases of rheumatism or complaints of that kind our artists know how to cure themselves very speedily. ST. JACOBS OIL is a very popular remedy among our people for rheumatic pains, and as long as they can get it they won't suffer much."

Mr. Frank I. Frayne says: "I have suffered terribly from rheumatism in my right shoulder and arm, and at the same time I had severe pains in my chest. Sometime since I read something in a newspaper about the remarkable cures of ST. JACOBS OIL, and I thought I would try that remedy. I tell you I am mighty glad I did, for after using one or two bottles of that preparation I felt no pain whatever, and have had none since. I am firm believer in ST. JACOBS OIL, and I want everybody in my company to keep it near them."

TWILIGHT.

BY ROGER RIORDAN.

[illegible], mother [illegible], [illegible],
Love the passing away of day.
The graying of all colors bodes
To them soft circumstance, fair play
For purposeless activities
And undefined sympathies.

Now one's mind is like his dress—
No one can the color guess;
Now one's heart is like the sky—
Changing, [illegible], rich;
And conscience, like the cross-roads sign
That tells not which is which.

I take some vagrant scent for guide—
Sweetbrier, lilac, mignonette,
Woodbine, hawthorn, violet—
And wander far and wide,
Homeless, nameless—kith nor kin—
Nor law above me nor within.

But wayside things I gladly greet,
As of my blood's most [illegible] strain;
They feed me with forbidden sweet,
Though drawn apart, I'm theirs again.
I kiss the stars, I clasp the sky,
And with the clouds on hill-tops lie.

For I have doffed humanity,
And put a looser vesture on;
Dead things have living tongues for me,
In deserts I am not alone.
Though outcast, rebel, renegade,
Dark Nature maketh me amends,
Her springs tabooed yield me sweet [illegible],
Her creatures are my secret friends.

A DINNER OF PEAS.

"As many as we have a mind to pick," Jetty Westart said impressively, "just think of that!"

"I never really had as many green peas as I wanted in my whole life," added her sister Kate.

"We never had enough of anything to eat," growled Jack, shying his cap at the cat. "Or of anything else, for that matter."

"We have plenty of you, at any rate," retorted Clare, the third sister, rushing to the rescue of puss.

"We'll all go over after supper," Jetty continued, too absorbed in thinking of the peas to notice the threatened squabble between Jack and Clare, "and pick them. Mr. Gardner said to take just as many as we could possibly eat, for the family will be gone a week, and the peas will only spoil on the vines."

"I could eat a bushel, I know," remarked Jack.

"You won't pick half a pint," put in Clare, who felt the snubbing of Jack to be her especial duty, "though there's no doubt you'll eat plenty when we get them."

"There, children," interposed Jetty, with the motherly air which she assumed as the head of the family. "Don't be always sparring. Jack, go and get me a pail of water, and you, Clare, set the table. Jim, you toast the bread."

It was one of the peculiarities of the family that the two older girls called each other "Jim."

When Mrs. Westart, the pale, high-bred, little widow, who had kept poverty from the door by dint of killing herself with toil at her pen, at last succumbed and left her four children alone in the world, the neighbors immediately fell to speculating whether their Uncle John, who had cast off his sister when she dared to marry against his wishes, would come to their aid, or whether the poor things would be forced to go to the poor-house. Neither of these things happened. When Farmer Gardner, with kindliest intent, offered Jack a place in his family to grow up as his own son, he was perhaps as much surprised as he was disappointed when Jetty answered him, very simply, but in a way that left no doubt that her decision was final:

"Of course we thank you, Mr. Gardner, and I know how good an offer it is for Jack; but I promised mamma I'd keep the family together, and of course we couldn't let him go."

Keep the family together! The good town's people were shocked and surprised, and expressed their astonishment and disapproval frankly enough to each other. To voice them to Miss Jetty Westart, was, however, a very different thing, for the pale little girl-woman had dignity enough to silence the most impudent of the gossips; and, however the talk buzzed behind her back, it came seldom to her ears. She taught the village school, and kept the family together, and it was not long before public opinion came to take sides with her and to condemn rich John Frenant, that he stood aloof, and continued the unkindness, which had gone far to break his sister's heart, to her unoffending children.

Life in the little Westart cottage, as may be easily understood was not very luxurious, and Jack's statement that they never had enough of anything, was not so inexact. On the present occasion, when Mr. Gardner had offered the spoils of his pea-vines to Jetty, the determination expressed by all the family, not even excepting the "little mother" herself, as some of the neighbors called Jetty, was to have all the peas they could possibly eat. After supper the whole family, even to the cat, who tagged along at the heels of Clare, proceeded in a body to Mr. Gardner's garden, and such a stripping as the vines received that night the vines certainly never had before or afterward.

"Now, Jim," Kate said the next morning, as they all sat shelling the peas, "for once we'll be extravagant, and put just as much butter on these as we want. If we don't have them good there's no fun having them at all."

"That's so," assented Jack, emphatically, as he dexterously dropped a pea down Clare's back.

"Oh, you horrid boy," Clare cried. "Jetty, I do wish you'd make Jack behave; I can't shell if he keeps scooting peas down my neck."

"Jack," the head of the family said with great dignity, "if you don't behave you shall not have a single pea for dinner, and as we shan't have anything else you'll be likely to go hungry."

"Pooh! who could stop me," he retorted contemptuously, but ceasing his tricks.

It happened to be Jetty's holiday, and the whole forenoon was devoted to preparation for that wonderful dinner of peas. Bread and butter and peas were to be the bill of fare; nothing else.

The table was spread with the best damask and china, relics of better days, and at last came the important moment, when Jetty, having gone through as tumultuous uncertainties as did Mrs. Bob Cratchit over her Christmas pudding, was ready to take to the table the big bowl of steaming peas, buttered and seasoned to a turn, and sending forth an odor delicious enough to tempt the King of Sybaris.

"Oh, golly!" ejaculated Jack, flourishing his long arms, which so persistently grew beyond his jacket sleeves. "How good they smell!"

"Don't they," said Kate. "Jim, did you ever smell anything that made you so hungry?"

"Hungry," retorted Clare. "I should think anybody might be hungry; it is an hour past dinner-time."

"My mouth fairly waters," went on Jack. "I wish, Jetty, you'd get along a little faster."

"I would, if you'd keep your long arms—"

Alas! for the vanity of human hopes and the emptiness of human expectations! Nobody ever knew exactly how it happened, but by the slipping of her foot or the unsteadiness of her hand, or by some dreadful combination of both, Jetty let the big china bowl fall, and the dinner of peas was deposited, a green heap, in the middle of the kitchen floor, with the dish turned upside down in the middle of them.

"Oh, thunder!"

"Oh, Jetty!"

"Oh, Jim!"

Exclaimed in concert Jack, Clare and Kate. Then there was an instant of terrible silence, and then a low, prolonged howl came from Dick. Clare began to sob lustily and Kate to cry softly, while Jetty sat staring at the heap of peas in stony silence, as if she were transformed into marble with horror.

"Oh, Jetty," sobbed Clare; "how could you? Oh, it is too cruel!"

"Jim," said Kate, trying to keep back her tears, "don't look that way. It isn't really any matter, of course."

"Really any matter!" cried Jack, in a rage. "I'd like to know what you call any matter!"

"Oh, I'm really starving to death," moaned Clare. "Oh, those beautiful, beautiful peas!"

By this time the tears were streaming down Jetty's face, and the entire family were gathered around the peas, seated on the floor and lamenting in company.

"Perhaps we could scoop up the top," suggested Kate hopefully. "They'll be clean and nice."

So spoons were brought and quite a respectable portion of the heap was restored to the dish, a state of things which quieted Jack and Clare, and restored something like serenity to the entire party.

But fate never does a thing by halves, and this time it was Kate who dropped the dish she held while Jetty carefully spooned into it such peas as she could save from the general ruin.

"Oh, Jim!"

"Oh, Jim!"

"Oh, Kate!"

"Darn it! Thunder! Cuss it! Blast it! There!" shouted Jack, defiantly.

The awful profanity of this speech startled and shocked the girls beyond measure.

"John Frenant Westart!" Jetty said, rising to her feet with a white face, and speaking in a voice whose sternness carried terror to the heart of the culprit. "What would mother say if she could hear you swear? Go up-stairs this minute, and don't show your face again until you can talk like a gentleman."

Without a word, Jack left the room, secretly frightened and shocked at his own behavior, but holding his head high and inflexible.

"For my part," said a cool, deep voice, "I don't blame the boy very much."

The three girls turned like a flash, and there, leaning over the low window-sill and looking in at them, was their uncle, John Frenant, of whom they were one and all thoroughly afraid.

"What in the world is all this fuss about?" pursued Mr. Frenant, scowling his thick eye-brows, but not without a gleam of amusement in his eyes.

"Kate," said Jetty, with her most dignified air, "will you please clear up these peas? If you will go round to the door, sir"—turning toward the window again—"I will let you in."

"Thank you," the intruder said, coolly stepping over the window ledge into the room. "You are your mother over again. I'd like to talk with you a little on business."

Jetty's heart quailed a little at that awful word, yet she didn't show a quiver, but led the way to the parlor with as regal an air as if she had been a Queen granting an interview extraordinary, or whatever it would be called, to an Ambassador equally extraordinary.

It is not necessary to relate all that was said between these two, or how at last Jetty broke down and cried on her uncle's shoulder, while he divided his attention between comforting her and clearing the mist from his own eyes. It seems that in his heart of hearts John Frenant had long had a desire to be reconciled with his sister's family, and only the night before had been looking over some souvenirs of childhood, which opened the long-sealed fountains of his love. It was from this cause, I suppose, it came about that he went out of his usual way home to walk by the Westart cottage, and the sound of weeping and wailing had brought him to the window.

I cannot pretend that their uncle proved always the pleasantest and most flexible of men to get on with, but at least there was no more worry about poverty in the little cottage, and, when matters between Jack and his uncle got tumultuous, as they occasionally did, Jetty always contrived somehow to bring things out smooth again.

So that altogether a worse misfortune might have overtaken the four orphans than even the loss of their so-much-anticipated dinner of peas.—Boston Courier.

PETER PARLEY'S GRAVE.

The parents of our young readers remember "Peter Parley's Magazine," "Robert Merry's Museum" that succeeded it, which was finally absorbed in the Youth's Companion. The genial old author of these once popular publications, once the delight of thousands of children, now sleeps without a monument—save in the good name and the loved and useful record he left to the world.

His grave lies almost unmarked on the Connecticut hillside. Once, while he was traveling in the West, a wealthy lady, at a festival in St. Louis given in his honor, complimented him as a benefactor of his race, and promised to erect a monument to his memory. That memorial has never been built. The good man's monument is in the loving hearts that, forty years ago, were his delighted readers and pupils.

It is well to remind the young of the present day where his ashes rest. At a very short distance from the "Goodrich Place," in Southbury, Ct., is a rural graveyard. Here and there, scattered in among the long grass, are mounds, where lie buried the forgotten dead. Now and then some modest shaft tells of those lately mourned, and once in a while some fine monument attracts the visitor's eye.

Within this inclosure is a small plot, fenced in with stern simplicity. Two costly but plain slabs of marble stand within. On one is a name and two dates, and the emblem is an open book with two or three dog-eared leaves. There lies "Peter Parley," world-known and world-loved; how few can tell where are shrined his mortal remains! Yet this was his choice. With the modesty of great minds, he shrunk from praise or publicity, and unsung, though not unhonored, he lies in a country graveyard.—Philadelphia Saturday Night.

A VICTIM OF STRANGE COINCIDENCE.

A merchant of this city, who has taken part in the Presidential elections of the last forty years, has had the singular misfortune to vote for the four Presidents who died in office—Harrison, Taylor, Lincoln and Garfield—and never have indorsed any other successful candidate. Hearing of this strange experience a reporter went to him for its corroboration. He said:

"I have always been a Whig and Republican, and I voted for Henry Clay, who was beaten. In 1840 I voted for Harrison, and he died in office. In 1844 I voted against Polk, who was elected. In 1848 I voted for Taylor, who also died in office. That was the first coincidence, but I never thought much about it. In 1852 I voted against Pierce, and he got through all right. In 1860 I voted the Fusion ticket as against Lincoln. I believed at that time that the slavery in the South was a domestic institution with which the North had no right to interfere. I changed my mind when I saw what the Southerners were doing, and in 1864 I voted for Lincoln, who was assassinated. This happening to the third successful candidate I had voted for rather staggered me. In 1868 I declined to vote at all—not because I was superstitious, but because I did not want to support Grant, and I would not vote for a Democrat. In 1872 I had moved my residence to New Jersey, and was not entitled to a vote that year. In 1876 I lost my vote, too, and in 1880 I told my friends that I did not want to vote for Garfield, for if I did he would either be defeated or would lose his life in office. They insisted upon my doing so, however, and it looked like such a close thing that I was finally persuaded and voted for Garfield. Now he is dead, and I never will vote for another President if I live to be 1,000 years old."

"And you are not superstitious?"

"No, sir," the merchant replied with some asperity, "but it is a very strange series of coincidences, and I don't want to prolong it. Now, I want you to promise me that you will not publish my name."

"I'll do it if you will promise never to vote for me for President," replied the reporter, and the compact was settled.—New York Herald.

A WIFE WHO IS TOO GOOD FOR ANYTHING.

"My wife," says Tom Arter, "is just too good for this earth—that's all there is about it. There isn't an angel in the suburbs of Heaven that can hold a candle to her in pure and cussed unadulterated goodness. Whatever she does or says is right, dead, unqualifiedly and emphatically right. Unborn babies and people who have lived long in their graves may do wrong, but Mrs. Arter never does. She is simply immaculate and most infernally infallible.

"She never told a lie—that is, she says she never did, and I value the remnant of hair on my head too valuable to dispute her. She can go walloping around among the neighbors, and gabble gossip and swap scandals and break commandments, and it's all right. She can wallop young Tom until he has to stand up for his breakfast for weeks at a clip, and it's all right. She can open a can of oysters with my razor and give away my best pants for a peck of peaches, and it's all right.

"But just let me commit an indiscretion no bigger than a pinhead, and I am the almightiest villain that ever breathed. Just let me go home feeling like I had been the butt end of a pile-driver all day, and remark that I'm tired, I'm the most unmitigated liar on the globe. Just let me spank Tom the least bit, and I'm the ungainliest brute unhung. Let me spend 5 cents for a glass of beer to cool my parched lips, and I'm a scoundrel whom it would be base flattery to call Guiteau.

"Fact is, she's too good, and I'm too mean. Young Tom is just middling, I reckon, and may grow up worth something. If he does it will be a miracle. One parent with shining, silver wings about to soar for Heaven every minute, and the other on the brink of Hades ready to drop, it is hard to say what the boy will come to, and he so young, too! Well, there's a point somewhere when a woman can get too good. She's hearing that line on the lightning express."

THE wheat-and-flour-export trade of California since July 1, the commencement of the current cereal year, has been unprecedented. There were forwarded in the four months ending Oct. 31 174 cargoes, representing 7,527,400 centals and a value of $11,816,400

GRIER county, in Texas, has 2,000,000 acres of unappropriated land.

TWO YEARS hence an entirely new system of railroads from ocean to ocean will be in operation, and already the better part of the great chain is completed. The termini will be New York and San Francisco. The roads forming the routes will be the New York, West Shore and Buffalo, the New York, Buffalo and Chicago, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Northern Pacific and the Oregon Navigation Company's lines. The system will be in direct opposition to the Vanderbilt lines and Union Pacific railroad, and it is claimed for it that it will run through the part of the country that supplies the greatest amount of travel and freight business. The Eastern line will be the New York, West Shore and Buffalo railway, extending from New York to Buffalo. The West Shore, as it is called, will be a powerful rival of the New York Central and Hudson River railroad. The length of the road will be 426 miles—some sixteen miles shorter than the Central. The road is to be straighter than the Central, and the projectors assert that the running time will be decreased at least one hour between New York and Buffalo. The West Shore is under contract to Syracuse, and the work of construction is being vigorously prosecuted on all sections. Just as soon as the surveys can be made west of Syracuse work will be begun. Trains will be running from New York to Albany on the west shore of the Hudson river next summer, and by the middle of 1882 the entire line will be in operation. The road will be double-tracked from one end to the other. Steel rails will be laid and the bridges will be of iron.

DOMESTIC ANIMALS IN EUROPE.

Taken all together, and considering the scarcity of food, the European domestic animals are treated remarkably well. In Belgium we saw an old woman knitting and casually leading by a string a pig, which was rooting along the highway. In the outskirts of Verona I saw a peasant woman similarly attached to a goose by a string, but which was leading the other, or whether they avoided personal responsibility and were off on a lark together, I was unable to ascertain.

In Southern Europe there are very few two-horse vehicles of any kind. One horse, or one donkey, is considered sufficient to draw anything that can be hitched to him. But this overwork is partially compensated for by hanging a bundle—four or five pounds—of hay to the end of one of the shafts, so that the animal can eat and work at the same time. It is odd to see a horse trotting along the street, and simultaneously facing around to the rear to nibble at the pendulous fodder. They get used to it, so that the divided attention does not seem to cause the smallest mental aberration or abstraction. As to dogs the European dog is a good specimen of his kind. I have not seen a vagrant cur or canine of the "yaller dog" species since landing on the Netherland flats. In Venice there is an old law, which is generally observed, that no dog shall be kept which weighs more than two pounds, and the result of the artificial selection is that the city of the sea contains a multitude of minute dogs, a little bigger than canary birds, always sheared back of their shoulders. It makes my blood run cold to see one of them sit down on the marble sidewalk, just as it does to see a bare-headed baby sit down on anything cold. I have a sly suspicion of my own that they make India shawls of the wool.—Cor. Chicago Inter Ocean.

BUILT TO SELL.

The married daughter of a contractor comes to visit her father, and, on going out with him for a walk to the latest scene of his labors, bursts out ecstatically: "O, pa, what lovely houses those are that you have been building—those cottages along the bank of the river. I have an awful great mind to take one and bring the children here and spend the summer near you." The contractor (deeply affected): "No, no, my child! Never! Not that I would not fain have you near me every day and hour, but, darling, those houses were not built to live in—they were built to sell!"

THE six healthiest cities of the United States are said to be in the order following: Knoxville, New Haven, Portland, San Francisco, Cleveland and Lawrence. The unhealthiest are Charleston, Memphis, Lynn, New York and St. Louis. St Petersburg is the unhealthiest city in the world, and is followed by Malaga, Alexandria, Warsaw and Buda-Pesth. In New York the deaths exceed the births by 1,000 a month, or 12,000 a year.

NO ONE can contemplate the statistics which reveal the wholesale slaughter of railroad brakemen in this country while they are engaged in the duty of coupling cars without being shocked into the conviction that some means for preventing it ought to be enforced. A law compelling the use of safety-couplers was introduced in the Connecticut Legislature during the last session and laid over for a year to afford the Railroad Commissioners of the State time to consider the subject. They are instructed to report at the coming session.

We have received a copy of the Report of the Ala. Railroad Commission. It is lengthy, but does not exhaust the subject. We this week present our readers with a letter from Washington. We have arranged with the National News Bureau to send THE VIEW a weekly letter, which we will publish whenever it may be sufficiently interesting. The letter for to-day is rather heavy on Guiteau, but it no doubt expresses the opinion of Washington society in the matter.

Robert Jones, white, and William Miller, colored, the murderers of the Walker brothers in Mississippi, have made full confessions in writing, of the part which each took in committing the fearful deed. Jones says that Miller and himself alone are guilty of the crime. And says that the negro held the light while he split open the head of each victim with an axe. Miller's confession is corroborative of this statement. Miller says that Jones promised him two hundred dollars for his assistance. The sole object of the murder was money, very little of which was obtained. Neither of the prisoners has had sufficient education to write his name, but each signs with the cross mark. It is likely that both will swing into eternity ere many weeks have passed.

PROHIBITION LAWS.

In a late number of the Montgomery Advertiser there is a comment upon the action of Gov. St. John, of Kansas, in attempting to enforce the prohibition law in that State, and that by his course he "publicly confesses that the prohibition law has not, does not and will not work in Kansas."

The grounds upon which the Advertiser makes the above statement, are based upon the fact that Gov. St. John has recently offered a reward for the apprehension of persons violating the prohibition law of his State. Our opinion is that the Advertiser is "off the track" and not Gov. St. John. The Governor of Kansas offers a reward for the apprehension of persons violating the law prohibiting the sale of liquor in that State, just as he might offer a reward for persons violating the law prohibiting murder or arson. And we see nothing in the Governor's action to justify the statement that "the prohibition law will not work in Kansas." It could with as much truth be said that the law prohibiting murder does not work in Mississippi, since the Governor of that State offered a reward for the apprehension of the murderer of the young Walkers. To the Advertiser we would say: Tentanda via est.

THE TARRIFF.

A correspondent of the New York World writes to that paper: "I hear it said that a large part of the revenue from import duties does not go the government, but to private persons. Please explain this." To which the World replies:

"The statement is incorrect.—All revenue derived from import duties goes into the Federal Treasury. But duties are often levied in such a manner that no revenue is derived from them and these are called "protective" duties, bcause they protect private persons in charging more than a reasonable profit. For argument sake suppose that it costs $25 to make a ton of rails in Belgium, $27 in Pennsylvania, and the ocean freight is $3. The Belgian must sell at $29 to make a profit; the Pennsylvanian at $28. So long as the Pennsylvanian is satisfied with $1 profit per ton, he can command the American market. But this is too small to suit his ideas. He asks for a duty of $20 per ton on steel rails and gets it. The Belgian then must pay $25 for making, $3 freight and $20 duty—a total of $48 per ton. The Penn syvanian sells for $45 per ton and keeps the Belgian out of the market Not a dollar of revenue is received because the Belgian does not import his rails; but the duty enables the Pennsylvanian to charge his countrymen $20 per ton profit. There is no addition to the wealth of the country, only a redistribution by by which the rich producer becomes richer and the poor consumer becomes poorer. It is this that was meant by the phrase you mention."

A CURIOUS THING.

It is no strange thing for a bank to wind up or be wound up, but for a bank to close business for the lack of profitable investments for its funds is some thing, so far as our knowledge extends, never known until now.

This strange reason for discontinuing business is given by the Bergin Savings Bank of Jersey City, N. J., as announced in the dispatches of yesterday.

The Bank has on hand the handsome little pile of 130,000 dollars but can find no paying investment. Hence it will wind up its affairs. This is an indication of how money goes a begging in the East, while here in the South there is absolutely no limit to profitable investments in manufacturing enterprises, in agricultural employments, in the building business, in a thousand things. Let the golden stream roll southward.—Mont. Advertiser.

HE DIDN'T ADVERTISE.

A nervous looking man went in a store the other day and sat down for half an hour or so when a clerk asked if there was anything she could do for him. She went away and he set there half an hour longer when the proprietor went to him and asked if he wanted to be shown anything. "No," said the nervous man; "I just wanted to sit around. My physician has recommended perfect quiet for me, and says above all things I must avoid being in crowds. Noticing that you did not advertise in the newspapers I thought that this would be as quiet a place as I could find, so I just dropped in for a few hours of complete isolation." The merchant picked up a bolt of paper cambric to brain him, but the man went out. He said all that he wanted was a quiet life.—Bonfort's Circular.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 9.

The long drawn out trial is now coming close upon its end, and it becomes more and more fixed in the minds of close observers that the wretch Guiteau has been weaving his own rope. The people of Washington, and of the country, have been justly incensed at the disgraceful scenes and outrageous conduct of the prisoner in court during the progress of the trial, but the one mitigating fact in connection with it is that all this has simply had the effect to make justice surer. No one who has observed the jury during the last two weeks expresses the least doubt that their minds are made up beyond the slightest probability of change. It is likely that within one week from this time the verdict of guilty will have been returned, sentence of death pronounced, and Guiteau will be lying in his cell, in a condition of utter, cowardly, unpitied prostration.—After he has given up hope there will be no more doubt outside the court-room, of his absolute accountability than there is with those who have witnessed his daily manifestations of ungovernable malice, brutal egotism, depravity and blackguardism. He is shrewd and cunning when confronted with the possible consequences of his act, and has expected by his conduct to save himself from all punishment beyond a few years in an asylum, meanwhile having secured the notoriety he so much covets.

His vituperative treatment of his sister and the lawyer who so patiently has conducted his case far better than even a more skillful, but paid counsel would have done; his base threats against the woman who had once been his wife; his references to the father who bore with him so long, to his dead mother, to the brother who can gain no benefit from his attendance on this trial, are developments of the most astounding evil character that has perhaps ever manifested itself to the world. In making up its judgment of Guiteau the country cannot compare him with its experience of other criminals. He is unparalleled. I have been told by experts and others who have had intimate acquaintance with convicts, that so bad a man, with wickedness so mirrored in his face, they have never seen. He has excessive brutality without courage, vulgar assertion without self-confidence when fairly confronted, abnormal malice without the capacity of strong hatred. He is a bestial wretch and capable of any crime, but as responsible for his acts as any such human brute can be. I want simply to add that, in the light of recent developments, the injustice of the criticism upon Judge Cox is fully apparent. He has had a hard case to deal with and has shown patience and wisdom through it all.

Congress has assembled again, after the holiday recess, but nothing of consequence will be done for some days. PHONO.

Every good act is charity. Giving water to the thirsty is charity. Removing stones and thorns from the road is charity. Exhorting your fellow-men to virtuous deeds is charity. Smiling in your brother's face is charity. A man's true wealth is the good he does in this world. When he dies, mortals will ask what property he has left behind him; but the angels will quire, "What good deeds hast thou sent before thee?"—Mahomet.

When the trains reach Clanton, the conductor yells: "Fifteen minutes to look on departed spirits."—Advertiser.

And some of the very "dry" straightway rejoiceth over newly arrived spirits.

Mr. Darby Riggins, of the Strasburg neighborhood had a trunk containing deeds and $20 in gold and a considerable amount of tobacco, stolen from his premises, one day last week. The theft was committed in broad daylight. No clue to the thief.

A meeting of the stockholders of the Pratt Saw Mill Company is to be held in the office of the company, on the 6th proximo, for the purpose of voting upon the matter of increasing the capital stock of the company from 25,000 to 75,000 dollars. We hope the increase in stock will be made.

A sale of some valuable mineral land took place in Clanton, last week. The sale was made by Sheriff Lowe to satisfy judgment obtained by Moses Simmons against James A. Dudley. The land, about 690 acres, was purchased by Mr. Adam Schussler, of Montgomery, at the remarkably low figure of twenty-five cents per acre.

The First Quarterly Meeting for 1882, of the Clanton M. E. Church, was held last Saturday and Sunday. Dr. Mitchell, the Presiding Elder, was in attendance, and gave us forcible sermons Saturday and Sunday mornings. Rev. J. W. Shores, the new minister, preached at 7 p. m. He is an able minister, and will be welcomed among us by members of his own as well as other denominations.

The population of Chilton county in 1870 (then Baker) was 6,194. In 1880 it was 10,806. In 1870 there were only three houses in Clanton, one of which was the courthouse, it being a log cabin. Mr. Wm. Wilson's storehouse and one dwelling house belonging then to Mr. Baker were the other houses. The progress which the county has made in one short decade shows that "there's life in the old land yet."

Mr. G. W. M. Pierce, of Strasburg, is an Englishman. He came to Clanton last week to vote for prohibition, and gave us his experience as a whiskey drinker. He is sixty years of age, and has been in Alabama eight years, and in that time he says he has "drank liquor enough to swim a horse," and is consequently as poor as when he came to the State. He spent nearly enough on whiskey last year to support his family, and now hopes to reform since the temptation is removed.

THE LIQUOR LAW.

We herewith append section 5, of the act entitled, "An act to authorize the Probate Judge of Chilton county to order elections in certain cases to determine whether spirituous, vinous or malt liquors shall be sold, given away or otherwise disposed of in said county, or in any beat or incorporated city or town therein."

ACTION OF PROBATE JUDGE—PENALTY FOR VIOLATION OF ACT.

Sec. 5. Be it further enacted, That if it appear to the Probate Judge on opening the election returns that a majority of electors voting at such election voted in favor of "Prohibition," then he shall record the result in the minutes of the Probate Court of said county, that the sale, giving away or otherwise disposing of spirituous, vinous or malt liquors was prohibited anywhere within the limits of said county, and shall cause a copy of the same to be published in at least one issue of a newspaper published in the county, or by posting up the same at the court house door and at three other public places in the county; and upon the expiration of ten days from the publication or posting of such notice, any person who sells, gives away or otherwise disposes of any spirituous vinous or malt liquors anywhere within said county, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, must be fined not less than one hundred nor more than one thousand dollars, and may also be sentenced to hard labor for the county for not more than twelve months.

ALABAMA ITEMS.

In Hayneville, on the 2d, seventeen shots were fired on the street. A negro boy was wounded, and by whom is unknown.

Prohibition now prevails in De-Kalb, Lowndes, Etowah, Henry and Dale counties, beginning on the 1st.

In Lowndes county Chas. Alexander, colored, made with one horse, last year, 12 bales of cotton, 250 bushels of corn, 12,000 stalks of cane, 150 bushels of potatoes and 5 stacks of fodder.

The Hayneville Examiner says: Hayneville is now for prohibition: Men and women, white and black, all rejoice and are exceeding glad that the monster vice of the southern people has been discountenanced in the community.

An Alabama man emigrated to Arkansas last year. He only became poetically inspired while in Rackensack, and was lately seen returning to his old home, with the following poem in large letters on his wagon cover:

"Last year Rackensack,
This year rackin' back."

A dastardly attempt at assassination was made near Hayneville on the night of the 2d. A negro fired at the occupants of a carriage, Messrs. Willie Cottrell and Tanney Murray with two young ladies who were on their way to a ball at Lowndesboro. No other harm was done than the riddling of both carriage and horses, with buck shot. The scoundrel has not been apprehended.

A negro at Crawford, Russell Co., waylaid and severely beat a young white man named Jones last week. The negro was arrested; after which a negro Methodist preacher headed a mob of 200 negroes and rescued the prisoner as he was being taken to jail, the mob shouting defiance to the few white citizens who were attempting to hinder them. The Sheriff in attempting to regain the prisoner, shot one of the rioters very severely; but the prisoner escaped. Young Jones is in a critical condition. He was beaten with a fence rail.

Killings and shooting scrapes have been unusually numerous in the State, the past two weeks. In Lauderdale county, Sam Robinson was shot by John Rice. Wound slight. A bystander was also slightly wounded. In Florence, J. E. Byrd, a saloon keeper, shot Wm. T. Brock, Esq., killing him. In Selma, Mr. Adams, proprietor of the Southern Hotel, shot and killed Mr. Babe Burns, in a saloon. In Talladega, Henry Pike killed his uncle George Pike. The slayer was drunk. In same county, Wm. Curry colored was shot by John Jenks, a white constable. Wound not dangerous. In Fayette county, Geo. W. King got into a difficulty with G. B. Sesney. Sesney was drinking. He stabbed King in the abdomen. King then drew a pistol, shot Sesney through the head, and fell down and soon died. Sesney was fatally shot. Whiskey was the cause of four-fifths of these crimes.

Mr. Harris, of Jefferson county, and Mrs. Posey of this county, were married the 29th ult.

MOUNTAIN CREEK DOTS.

EDITOR VIEW: The Christmas tree given by the Mountain Creek Sabbath school was an event long to be remembered. It was under the supervision of Messrs. Wadsworth, Smith, Taft, and Marbury, and some other friends of the school. An appropriate address was delivered by the Superintendent, Mr. F. F. Thomasson. "Santa Claus" was represented by Mr. W. T. Smith, who kept the audience in the best of humor while the tree was being stripped.

Married, near Mountain Creek, the 25th ult., by Rev. J. M. Stanfield, Mr. Lafayette Rollins to Miss Della R. Nelson, of Autauga county.

"Two souls with but a single thought,
Two hearts that beat as one."

The lumber business is good for this season of the year. There are more laborers seeking employment at the mills than usual—an evidence of short crops during the past year.

The VIEW is a welcome visitor in our neighborhood, and the wish is universally expressed that it may receive the undivided support of the whole people of the county, and be at once placed on a firm and paying basis.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of a Fieri Facias issued out of the clerk's office of the circuit court of Shelby county, and State of Alabama, and to me directed, whereby I am commanded to make the amount of a certain judgment recently obtained against Charles W. Cary, and in favor of Anderson, Green & Company, out of the goods, chattels, lands and tenements of the said Charles W. Cary, I have levied on the following property, to-wit: A certain lot or parcel of land bounded as follows: On the west by Mahon's creek, from Mulkey's ford down to the mouth of a certain drain, and on the north by east and west line running to a certain mound in the rocky hill where it corners; on the east by the land bought by R. H. Meredith, of H. Butler, of Montevallo, and on the south by the line running through Mulkey's lane, containing thirty acres more or less; also five acres more or less east of Mahon's creek, including the west bank running from Mulkey's ford up to the mouth of the spring branch; also the southeast quarter of section 3, and the west half of the north west quarter of section 2; the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 2; the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 2; the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 10; and the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 3; the south half of the northeast quarter of section 3, all of said lands being in township 23, range 12 east, containing five hundred and fifty acres more or less, situated in chilton county in said State.

Therefore, according to said command, I shall expose for sale, at Public Auction, all the right, title and interest of the above named chas. W. cary, in and to the above described property, on Monday, the 6th day, of February, 1882, during the legal hours of sale, at the courthouse door, in clanton, for cash.

HOW TO LIFT A THOUSAND POUNDS.

Dumb-bells weighing not over five pounds each are recommended, which should be used regularly every morning and evening for half an hour for a year. By this time it will be found that the muscles of the arms, legs and body will have increased very much and become exceedingly firm and hard. When this condition has been acquired, then, and not till then, can a man think of lifting heavy weights; for if he cannot get his muscles and nerves in this condition, he can never become a lifter, even with years of practice, as it takes strength as well as sleight to lift a heavy weight. Some very good authorities recommend lifting at the commencement, adding that "you must not lift too much." But how can inexperienced hands tell when it is too much before they find themselves permanently injured?

After the year's exercise with dumb-bells, or otherwise, as previously suggested, then a man who is not ruptured or otherwise injured can commence a systematic course of lifting, starting with not over 100 pounds, which he can lift as many times a day as he is disposed to do for one month. He can then add another fifty pounds to the weight to be lifted during the second month's exercise, and so on, adding an additional fifty-pound weight each month for twenty months, when he will be able to lift the great weight of 1,000 pounds without any danger of injuring himself. This is a general rule, and any man with a sound body can reach it if he only follows the prescribed course, and never tries to overdo the thing. If the weight will not come up without too much strain, stop, for it is too heavy for you at that point of your training. To lift correctly and without danger a person must stand erect, the heels on the same line, the toes turned out, the shoulders thrown back and the body resting squarely on the hips—the arms hanging down by the sides. The legs should then be bent merely enough to enable the hands to grasp the handles or rings of what you are to lift; then lift by merely straightening the legs, and not by the arms or the body. If you have to strain, and the weight does not come up freely, then you are attempting too much and should try a lighter load. When you have become strong enough to lift 1,000 pounds you are in reality a strong man and should be perfectly satisfied to let well enough alone, for all who attempt to exceed that point there is not one man in 100 who, at some time or other, does not injure himself for life. Some few do not, but they are rare exceptions.

TESTING HIS EYES.

There has been a great deal of nonsense written about the power of the human eye over wild beasts. An incident occurred, during the visit of the Duke of Edinburgh to the Malay peninsula, which shows the fallacy of this popular notion.

Among other sights, the Duke was shown a beautiful black leopard, confined in a cage. The beast, one of the fiercest and most beautiful creatures of the Malay jungles, was crouching.

A doctor attached to the Duke's suite, who had been talking about the power of the human eye to subdue wild animals, thought he would give a practical illustration of the theory.

Going up to the cage, he gazed steadfastly into the dilating eyes of the savage leopard, hoping to intimidate it. For a few moments the leopard bore the stare. Then, without the slightest warning, he sprang at the doctor. A growl, a dash, a shriek, and the man staggered back into the arms of his friends.

With his cap torn off and his cheek laid open, he departed a sadder and a wiser man. Nothing but his cap's peak saved his magnetic eye from the claws of the infuriated beast.—Youth's Companion.

THE ART OF SWINGING A SCYTHE.

A young man from the city, while visiting friends in the country, became interested in the invigorating spectacle of the farmer's hired man cutting weeds with a scythe. It suggested to his inexperienced mind the "poetry of motion." When the hired man laid down the scythe and went into the barn a few minutes, the city youth picked up the utensil and made a lunge at a group of weeds. The point of the scythe struck the earth with such unexpectedness that the youth fell over the handle and plowed up the earth with his head. He was a little discouraged, but it looked so easy that he got up and essayed another stroke. This was disastrous. The blade appeared to coil around his legs like a serpent, cutting through his hip pocket about an inch, amputating a portion of his coat-tail, and then cut slices of flesh out of his calves. He is now convinced that it is easier to fall over a wheelbarrow than to swing a scythe without any previous instructions.—Norristown Herald.

WHEN Great Britain cut off from her supply of foreign food, no inconsiderable portion of her population would die of starvation. Last year the amount imported reached the enormous total of $830,000,000. Statistics show that while the population from 1859 to 1876 only increased 23¼ to 32¼ millions, a gain of but 16 per cent., the value of food furnished from abroad advanced from $295,000,000 to $765,000,000, a growth of 160 per cent. Of the vast amount imported in the last-mentioned year, $182,500,000 came from the United States; $90,000,000 from France; about $120,000,000 from British India and China; 110,000,000 from Germany, Holland and Belgium; nearly $65,000,000 from Russia and Turkey, and the remainder from the multitude of countries scattered over the world. Stephen Bourne, who has been discussing this subject in a series of essays, comes to the conclusion that Great Britain relies upon foreign and home produce in about the proportion of two-fifths to three-fifths.

GEORGE WARRICK, a young man of Middletown, near Harrisburg, Pa., had a dream that at the bottom of a neighboring creek, at a certain place, would be found the body of a missing man. The stream had already been dragged, but Warrick's dream led a party to the right spot, and the body was found. It was a mysterious find, to be sure, but there could be no possible reason for putting the young man out of the way by foul means, he being a sort of imbecile creature.

A Smile of Satisfaction.

This from the Cleveland (Ohio) Penny Press, carries its own suggestion: Recently meeting Mr. H. G. Keffer, treasurer of the Cleveland Herald, our representative inquired of that gentleman, after stating his mission, if he personally knew anything about the Great German Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil. A smile played acrossed Mr. Keffer's expressive face and his eyes twinkled merrily as he replied in the affirmative. I will not refuse to state my experience with it, and you may use it as you think best. Four years ago I sprained one of my ankles, an accident which, as you are aware, entails much suffering and sometimes leaves the limb in a condition to remind one frequently of the old hurt. Unfortunately this result ensued. Whenever the weather became damp or my system absorbed the slightest cold my ankles pained me. This went on at intervals for over three years, and I could not obtain relief. Last winter I applied the St. Jacobs Oil, and it completely cured me. I have not since felt a return of the pain.

THE city of Brooklyn has elected Seth Low to be her Mayor. He is almost a boy in appearance, and is the son of probably the richest man in Brooklyn, the well-known tea merchant Low, who is of a Massachusetts family, long doing business in New York city. Young Low took the stump himself, though not a seeker for the office. His appearance was rather against him. His speeches sounded Sophomoric, yet the polls were manned by young fellows.

THE Trenton (N. J.) Gazette mentions the case of John Wood, with the American Pottery Co., that city, who was cured by St. Jacobs Oil of an attack of rheumatism, which had confined him to his bed for seventeen weeks. He praises it unstintedly.

STEERS weighing from 1,200 to 1,700 pounds best suit the British butchers, as they can cut up the carcasses of such most economically for their customers, and the size of the pieces is more acceptable to them.

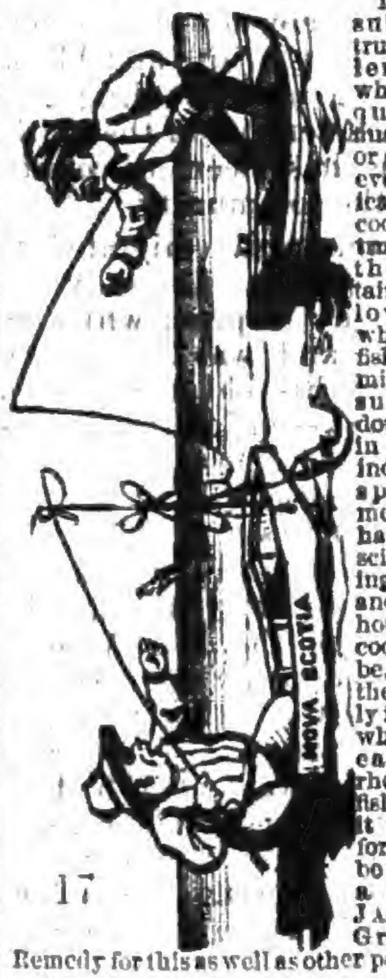
THE OLD WATER-WHEEL IN EUROPE.

Everywhere in Europe we have found the grain mills stationed in the languid streams and propelled by undershot wheels—that is, the floating mills are anchored, and the great wheels are slowly turned by the water running by. These are along the Rhine, in the Idar, the Adige, the Po, the Arno. The wheels go at a snail's pace, but that is the pace of all Europe, and it doesn't take much celerity to satisfy the restful spirit of the average Italian.—Letter from Italy.

ALWAYS KEEP COOL.



To stick to your subject and the truth is an excellent plan, and whether it be in questions of finance or fishing, or any topic whatever, civil or political, always keep cool and tell the truth. However, there is a certain margin allowed for lying, when it comes to fishing, that is permitted in no other subject, and no doubt our friends in the picture are indulging in that special employment, as well, perhaps, as in a little scientific swearing. Their bodies and tempers are hot and the air is cool (as they should be, but are not,) and they are apparently in the condition when it is much easier to catch rheumatism than fish, in which case it would be well for them that they be provided with a bottle of ST. JACOBS OIL, the Great German Remedy for this as well as other painful ailments.

WE'LL NAIL ITS COLORS TO THE MAST.

"Hello, Denny! what is the trouble?" "Oh, I'm all broke up," was the response to the inquiry of an old shipmate of William G. Denniston, one of Farragut's war-worn veterans, well known in the southern section of this city, who came limping into the American office yesterday. "I thought I would go under the hatches this time," continued Denniston. "I never suffered so much in my life. I had the rheumatic gout so bad that I could not get off the bed or put my foot to the floor, and would have been there yet if a friend had not recommended ST. JACOBS OIL to me. I hesitated some time before getting a bottle, thinking it was another one of those advertised nostrums, but was finally induced to give it a trial, and a lucky day it was for me. Why, bless my stars! after bathing the limb thoroughly with the Oil I felt relief, and my faith was pinned to St. Jacobs and his Oil after that. I freely say that if it had not been for ST. JACOBS OIL I should, in all probability, be still housed. My foot pains me but little, and the swelling has entirely passed away. It beats anything of the kind I have ever heard of, and any person who doubts it send them to me at 1924 South Tenth st.—Philadelphia Times.

GENTLEMEN: I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month's did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit.

From Mr. Haley P. Hopkins, of Providence, R. I. He is cured of Consumption by Dr. Schenck's Medicines, after being given up to die by some of the best physicians of the city.

DR. J. H. SCHENCK:

Dear Sir—I have been cured of what three of the best physicians of this city told me was Consumption of the Lungs, by the use of your medicines. I was first attacked with the disease in October, 1880, and although I was from that time continually under the care of a physician I grew worse and worse, until I was confined to my bed. I can hardly say that I was first attacked with the disease in 1880, for my lungs had been weak for many years previous to this, and I would quite often have severe pain in my breast, if I took the least cold or exerted myself too much in any way. I grew worse, my cough became very bad; I had night sweats so severe that my bed, through the night, would be as wet as though water had been thrown over me. I was continually raising blood and large quantities of offensive matter from my lungs, and at last had all the well-known symptoms of Consumption in its last stages.

At the request of my family, my physician called in two other doctors of this city, and they, after an examination, agreed that my case was hopeless. They informed my wife that I had better be told that I could not live, as my time would be very short for arranging my worldly affairs. They also said that no medicine would be of any use to me. The next day my friend, Mr. H. I. Leith, hearing of my condition, sent me a bottle of your Pulmonic Syrup, thinking it might relieve my cough and make my expectoration easier. I began using it, never even hoping that it would cure me, but finding great relief from its use. When the first bottle was gone I sent and got more; so I continued it until I had used seven or eight bottles. All this time I was in bed and was so weak that I had to be lifted. This was not a difficult thing to do, however, as I only weighed about ninety pounds. As I have said, I commenced the use of the medicine with no thought of its curing me, but after taking the eighth bottle I would sometimes feel a little hungry, a thing I had not before done for many months. I omitted to mention that after taking four or five bottles of the Pulmonic Syrup, I also began taking the Seaweed Tonic, and I also took some of the Mandrake Pills.

It is needless for me to give you an account of all my feelings during my recovery. Of course it was slow, but it was also sure. I gradually gained strength, the character of what I raised from my lungs was changed—not being so offensive—and at last I was able to get up and walk about my room. From this time my recovery was rapid. I gained flesh fast and soon went out doors, and now I am entirely well, a wonder to all my acquaintances who saw me when I was so low.

I weigh one hundred and sixty-two pounds, appetite good, and I can truly say that I never felt better in my life. I consider your medicines as wonderful in their effects. They have saved my life, and I feel so thankful to you that I am anxious that all who are suffering with lung troubles should know how good they are. Of course, I can give a better account of my case in telling of it than in writing, and if any who read this are interested, they are welcome to call on me at my residence.

Yours Truly,
HARLEY P. HOPKINS,

MR. HARLEY P. HOPKINS, who writes the foregoing letter to Dr. Schenck, of Philadelphia, is an old resident of Providence. I have known him well for the last fifteen years, and I can assure the public that all he has written in regard to his sickness and recovery is strictly true. He was considered a consumptive, in the last stages of the disease, by his physician and friends, and I believe that his recovery is entirely due to the use of Dr. Schenck's medicines.

PILLS,
The Great Vegetable Substitute for Mercury.

DR. SCHENCK'S
MANDRAKE PILLS

Do not produce sickness at the stomach, nausea or griping. On the contrary, they are so mild and agreeable in their action that a person suffering with a sick headache, sour stomach, or pain in the bowels, is speedily relieved of these distressing symptoms. They act directly on the liver, the organ which, when in a healthy condition, purifies the blood for the whole body.

They are a perfect preparation of that great and well-known remedy, Mandrake or Podophyllin, a remedy that has displaced the use of mercury, as well as many other poisonous drugs in the practice of every intelligent physician.

Prof. John King, of the College of Medicine, of Cincinnati, says: "In Constipation it acts upon the bowels without disposing them to subsequent costiveness. In Chronic Liver Complaint there is no its equal in the whole range of medicines, being vastly more useful than mercurial agents, arousing the liver to healthy action, increasing the flow of bile, and keeping up these actions longer than any other agent with which we are acquainted." (See American Dispensatory, page 720.)

In all cases of Liver Complaint or Dyspepsia, where there is great weakness or debility, Dr. Schenck's Seaweed Tonic should be used in connection with these Pills.

HOW TO LIFT A THOUSAND POUNDS.

Dumb-bells weighing not over five pounds each are recommended, which should be used regularly every morning and evening for half an hour for a year. By this time it will be found that the muscles of the arms, legs and body will have increased very much and become exceedingly firm and hard. When this condition has been acquired, then, and not till then, can a man think of lifting heavy weights; for if he cannot get his muscles and nerves in this condition, he can never become a lifter, even with years of practice, as it takes strength as well as sleight to lift a heavy weight. Some very good authorities recommend lifting at the commencement, adding that "you must not lift too much." But how can inexperienced hands tell when it is too much before they find themselves permanently injured?

After the year's exercise with dumb-bells, or otherwise, as previously suggested, then a man who is not ruptured or otherwise injured can commence a systematic course of lifting, starting with not over 100 pounds, which he can lift as many times a day as he is disposed to do for one month. He can then add another fifty pounds to the weight to be lifted during the second month's exercise, and so on, adding an additional fifty-pound weight each month for twenty months, when he will be able to lift the great weight of 1,000 pounds without any danger of injuring himself. This is a general rule, and any man with a sound body can reach it if he only follows the prescribed course, and never tries to overdo the thing. If the weight will not come up without too much strain, stop, for it is too heavy for you at that point of your training. To lift correctly and without danger a person must stand erect, the heels on the same line, the toes turned out, the shoulders thrown back and the body resting squarely on the hips—the arms hanging down by the sides. The legs should then be bent merely enough to enable the hands to grasp the handles or rings of what you are to lift; then lift by merely straightening the legs, and not by the arms or the body. If you have to strain, and the weight does not come up freely, then you are attempting too much and should try a lighter load. When you have become strong enough to lift 1,000 pounds you are in reality a strong man and should be perfectly satisfied to let well enough alone, for all who attempt to exceed that point there is not one man in 100 who, at some time or other, does not injure himself for life. Some few do not, but they are rare exceptions.

TESTING HIS EYES.

There has been a great deal of nonsense written about the power of the human eye over wild beasts. An incident occurred, during the visit of the Duke of Edinburgh to the Malay peninsula, which shows the fallacy of this popular notion.

Among other sights, the Duke was shown a beautiful black leopard, confined in a cage. The beast, one of the fiercest and most beautiful creatures of the Malay jungles, was crouching.

A doctor attached to the Duke's suite, who had been talking about the power of the human eye to subdue wild animals, thought he would give a practical illustration of the theory.

Going up to the cage, he gazed steadfastly into the dilating eyes of the savage leopard, hoping to intimidate it. For a few moments the leopard bore the stare. Then, without the slightest warning, he sprang at the doctor. A growl, a dash, a shriek, and the man staggered back into the arms of his friends.

With his cap torn off and his cheek laid open, he departed a sadder and a wiser man. Nothing but his cap's peak saved his magnetic eye from the claws of the infuriated beast.—Youth's Companion.

THE ART OF SWINGING A SCYTHE.

A young man from the city, while visiting friends in the country, became interested in the invigorating spectacle of the farmer's hired man cutting weeds with a scythe. It suggested to his inexperienced mind the "poetry of motion." When the hired man laid down the scythe and went into the barn a few minutes, the city youth picked up the utensil and made a lunge at a group of weeds. The point of the scythe struck the earth with such unexpectedness that the youth fell over the handle and plowed up the earth with his head. He was a little discouraged, but it looked so easy that he got up and essayed another stroke. This was disastrous. The blade appeared to coil around his legs like a serpent, cutting through his hip pocket about an inch, amputating a portion of his coat-tail, and then cut slices of flesh out of his calves. He is now convinced that it is easier to fall over a wheelbarrow than to swing a scythe without any previous instructions.—Norristown Herald.

Were Great Britain cut off from her supply of foreign food, no inconsiderable portion of her population would die of starvation. Last year the amount imported reached the enormous total of $830,000,000. Statistics show that while the population from 1859 to 1876 only increased 23¼ to 32¼ millions, a gain of but 16 per cent., the value of food furnished from abroad advanced from $295,000,000 to $765,000,000, a growth of 160 per cent. Of the vast amount imported in the last-mentioned year, $182,500,000 came from the United States; $90,000,600 from France; about $120,000,000 from British India and China; 110,000,000 from Germany, Holland and Belgium; nearly $65,000,000 from Russia and Turkey, and the remainder from the multitude of countries scattered over the world. Stephen Bourne, who has been discussing this subject in a series of essays, comes to the conclusion that Great Britain relies upon foreign and home produce in about the proportion of two-fifths to three-fifths.

George Warrick, a young man of Middletown, near Harrisburg, Pa., had a dream that at the bottom of a neighboring creek, at a certain place, would be found the body of a missing man. The stream had already been dragged, but Warrick's dream led a party to the right spot, and the body was found. It was a mysterious find, to be sure, but there could be no possible reason for putting the young man out of the way by foul means, he being a sort of imbecile creature.

A Smile of Satisfaction.

This from the Cleveland (Ohio) Penny Press, carries its own suggestion: Recently meeting Mr. H. G. Keffer, treasurer of the Cleveland Herald, our representative inquired of that gentleman, after stating his mission, if he personally knew anything about the Great German Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil. A smile played acrossed Mr. Keffer's expressive face and his eyes twinkled merrily as he replied in the affirmative. I will not refuse to state my experience with it, and you may use it as you think best. Four years ago I sprained one of my ankles, an accident which, as you are aware, entails much suffering and sometimes leaves the limb in a condition to remind one frequently of the old hurt. Unfortunately this result ensued. Whenever the weather became damp or my system absorbed the slightest cold my ankles pained me. This went on at intervals for over three years, and I could not obtain relief. Last winter I applied the St. Jacobs Oil, and it completely cured me. I have not since felt a return of the pain.

The city of Brooklyn has elected Seth Low to be her Mayor. He is almost a boy in appearance, and is the son of probably the richest man in Brooklyn, the well-known tea merchant Low, who is of a Massachusetts family, long doing business in New York city. Young Low took the stump himself, though not a seeker for the office. His appearance was rather against him. His speeches sounded Sophomoric, yet the polls were manned by young fellows.

The Trenton (N. J.) Gazette mentions the case of John Wood, with the American Pottery Co., that city, who was cured by St. Jacobs Oil of an attack of rheumatism, which had confined him to his bed for seventeen weeks. He praises it unstintedly.

Steers weighing from 1,200 to 1,700 pounds best suit the British butchers, as they can cut up the carcasses of such most economically for their customers, and the size of the pieces is more acceptable to them.

THE OLD WATER-WHEEL IN EUROPE.

Everywhere in Europe we have found the grain mills stationed in the languid streams and propelled by undershot wheels—that is, the floating mills are anchored, and the great wheels are slowly turned by the water running by. These are along the Rhine, in the Ider, the Adige, the Po, the Arno. The wheels go at a snail's pace, but that is the pace of all Europe, and it doesn't take much celerity to satisfy the restful spirit of the average Italian.—Letter from Italy.

ALWAYS KEEP COOL.

To stick to your subject and the truth is an excellent plan, and whether it be in questions of finance or fishing, or any topic whatever, civil or political, always keep cool and tell the truth. However, there is a certain margin allowed for lying, when it comes to fishing, that is permitted in no other subject, and no doubt our friends in the picture are indulging in that special employment, as well, perhaps, as in a little scientific swearing. Their bodies and tempers are hot and the air is cool (as they should be, but are not,) and they are apparently in the condition when it is much easier to catch rheumatism than fish, in which case it would be well for them that they be provided with a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, the Great German Remedy for this as well as other painful ailments.

WE'LL NAIL ITS COLORS TO THE MAST.

"Hello, Denny! what is the trouble?" "Oh, I'm all broke up," was the response to the inquiry of an old shipmate of William G. Denniston, one of Farragut's war-worn veterans, well known in the southern section of this city, who came limping into the American office yesterday. "I thought I would go under the hatches this time," continued Denniston. "I never suffered so much in my life. I had the rheumatic gout so bad that I could not get off the bed or put my foot to the floor, and would have been there yet if a friend had not recommended St. Jacobs Oil to me. I hesitated some time before getting a bottle, thinking it was another one of those advertised nostrums, but was finally induced to give it a trial, and a lucky day it was for me. Why, bless my stars! after bathing the limb thoroughly with the Oil I felt relief, and my faith was pinned to St. Jacob and his Oil after that. I freely say that if it had not been for St. Jacobs Oil I should, in all probability, be still housed. My foot pains me but little, and the swelling has entirely passed away. It beats anything of the kind I have ever heard of, and any person who doubts it send them to me at 1924 South Tenth st.—Philadelphia Times.

GENTLEMEN: I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit. J. P. From Mr. Haley P. Hopkins, of Providence, R. I. He is cured of Consumption by Dr. Schenck's Medicines, after being given up to die by some of the best physicians of the city.

Dr. J. H. Schenck:

Dear Sir—I have been cured of what three of the best physicians of this city told me was Consumption of the Lungs, by the use of your medicines. I was first attacked with the disease in October, 1880, and although I was from that time continually under the care of a physician I grew worse and worse, until I was confined to my bed. I can hardly say that I was first attacked with the disease in 1880, for my lungs had been weak for many years previous to this, and I would quite often have severe pain in my breast, if I took the least cold or exerted myself too much in any way. I grew worse, my cough became very bad; I had night sweats so severe that my bed, through the night, would be as wet as though water had been thrown over me. I was continually raising blood and large quantities of offensive matter from my lungs, and at last had all the well-known symptoms of Consumption in its last stages.

At the request of my family, my physician called in two other doctors of this city, and they, after an examination, agreed that my case was hopeless. They informed my wife that I had better be told that I could not live, as my time would be very short for arranging my worldly affairs. They also said that no medicine would be of any use to me. The next day my friend, Mr. H. L. Leith, hearing of my condition, sent me a bottle of your Pulmonic Syrup, thinking it might relieve my cough and make my expectoration easier. I began using it, never even hoping that it would cure me, but finding great relief from its use. When the first bottle was gone I sent and got more; so I continued it until I had used seven or eight bottles. All this time I was in bed and was so weak that I had to be lifted. This was not a difficult thing to do, however, as I only weighed about ninety pounds. As I have said, I commenced the use of the medicine with no thought of its curing me, but after taking the eighth bottle I would sometimes feel a little hungry, a thing I had not before done for many months. I omitted to mention that after taking four or five bottles of the Pulmonic Syrup, I also began taking the Seaweed Tonic, and I also took some of the Mandrake Pills.

It is needless for me to give you an account of all my feelings during my recovery. Of course it was slow, but it was also sure. I gradually gained strength, the character of what I raised from my lungs was changed—not being so offensive—and at last I was able to get up and walk about my room. From this time my recovery was rapid. I gained flesh fast and soon went out doors, and now I am entirely well, a wonder to all my acquaintances who saw me when I was so low.

I weigh one hundred and sixty-two pounds, appetite good, and I can truly say that I never felt better in my life. I consider your medicines as wonderful in their effects. They have saved my life, and I feel so thankful to you that I am anxious that all who are suffering with lung troubles should know how good they are. Of course, I can give a better account of my case in telling of it than in writing, and if any who read this are interested, they are welcome to call on me at my residence.

Yours Truly,
HARLEY P. HOPKINS,
No. 7 Howell St., Providence, R. I.
May 19, 1881.

Mr. Harley P. Hopkins, who writes the foregoing letter to Dr. Schenck, of Philadelphia, is an old resident of Providence. I have known him well for the last fifteen years, and I can assure the public that all he has written in regard to his sickness and recovery is strictly true. He was considered a consumptive, in the last stages of the disease, by his physician and friends; and I believe that his recovery is entirely due to the use of Dr. Schenck's medicines.

PILLS,
The Great Vegetable Substitute for Mercury.
They will cure Chills and Fever.
They will cure Diarrhœa.
They will cure obstinate constipation, leaving the Stomach and Bowels in a healthy condition.
They will cure Liver Complaint, that great forerunner of Consumption.

MANDRAKE PILLS

Do not produce sickness at the stomach, nausea or griping. On the contrary, they are so mild and agreeable in their action that a person suffering with a sick headache, sour stomach or pain in the bowels, is speedily relieved of these distressing symptoms. They act directly on the liver, the organ which, when in a healthy condition, purifies the blood for the whole body.

They are a perfect preparation of that great and well-known remedy, Mandrake or Podophyllin, a remedy that has displaced the use of mercury, as well as many other poisonous drugs in the practice of every intelligent physician.

Prof. John King, of the College of Medicine, of Cincinnati, says: "In Constipation it acts upon the bowels without disposing them to subsequent costiveness. In Chronic Liver Complaint there is not its equal in the whole range of medicines, being vastly more useful than mercurial agents, arousing the liver to healthy action, increasing the flow of bile, and keeping up these actions longer than any other agent with which we are acquainted." (See American Dispensatory, page 725.)

In all cases of Liver Complaint or Dyspepsia, where there is great weakness or debility, Dr. Schenck's

Seaweed Tonic should be used in connection with these Pills.

Of this indi- al quite full accounts are handed n, and curious researchers into the ily history claim to have discovered coat of arms, and, if the description t is correct, it goes far to confirm the vious conclusion that the Garfields e a martial family of wealth and in- nce in the days of Queen Elizabeth, , perhaps, in the crusades. It had e horizontal bars of red on a field, or ground, of gold in the center of the ld, and a red Maltese cross on an ine canton or corner piece. The consisted of a helmet with the visor ed, and an uplifted arm holding a n sword. For a motto were the s: "In cruce vinco" (by the cross quer). This Edward Garfield, from m the present large Garfield family America has descended, appears to e taken no great pride in his lineage dly titles, for he took a personal laborious share in the manual labor nected with the clearing of his land Watertown, and left but a meager e of his armorial badge. His house s built on a beautiful spot in Water- n, overlooking the Charles river, and site is still pointed out to visitors, r the railroad station of the Fitch- g railroad. In this house he lived but few years before he was able to pur- e a much larger estate in the western t of Watertown, near the present loca- of the Waltham town line. On this d he erected a capacious mansion, and rounded himself with all the comforts l elegance of the "gentleman" of t period, and the estate, now known the "Gov. Gore place," still holds its ition as one of the most beautiful and able estates in the vicinity of Boston. is Edward Garfield had a son, Edward, , and he in turn had a son, Benjamin, o became a distinguished citizen of tertown and was given a Captain's mission, by the Governor, in the col- ial militia. He held numerous town ces, and was elected nine times to the lonial Legislature. He was a stout, ad-shouldered man, with an open, erful countenance, and most affable kind in his manners. His light plexion, and especially the light r, appear to have descended to the sent generation. The next ancestor line was Lieut. Thomas Garfield, who offspring numbering an even dozen.

omas, Jr., the third in order, was the who should be written among the ent grand-fathers of the late Presi- t, and the next one down the scale s Solomon Garfield, the oldest son of junior Thomas. Solomon's brother aham was an earnest devotee of erican independence, and lived in the n of Lincoln when the Revolutionary r began. He was one of the first vol- eers enlisted in the defense of the onies, and was in the fight at Concord, side by side with many illustrious ericans, including Judge E R [illegible] Hoar, whose descendant and [illegible] become noted in the c [illegible] tion in later years. T [illegible] Judge Hoar's great-gr [illegible] Hoar, and Abraham [illegible] preserved, and the [illegible] signed was an [illegible] time.

At the beginnin [illegible] separation from England was not generally meditated, and it was deemed important to endeavor to fix the responsibility for the beginning of the conflict, showing which side struck the first blow, in the event of a settlement of the troubles. Therefore the affidavits of many persons concerned were secured and preserved.

Solomon's eldest son, Thomas Garfield, was born in 1775, and lived a farmer's life at Worcester, Otsego county, N. Y., and married Asenatte Hill, of Sharon, N. Y. Their children were Polly, Betsey, Abram and Thomas. Abram, who was named for his patriotic uncle, who fought at Concord, was the father of the late President. He was born Dec. 28, 1799, at Worcester, N. Y. He was kept hard at work on a farm, with little opportunity for an education. He was married to Miss Eliza Ballou, the venerable surviving mother of the murdered President, and removed to Ohio in 1819. They had four children, all of whom are now living except the late President. The father died suddenly while James was a creeping infant.

THE most horrible suffering that could be endured by a dumb brute, and for which death was the only relief, was witnessed recently in the streets of St. Louis. Henry Bockstruck, a pork-butcher, was making his regular morning deliveries to the meat shops, and was driving a very fractious mare that he took particular caution in handling. Bockstruck tied his horse to a hitching-post and carried a lot of pork into a meat-market. While the meat was being weighed the animal became restive and stood upon the sidewalk with its fore feet. One of the numerous wagons passing struck the hind wheels of the pork-wagon. Frightened at the shock, the skittish brute made a lunge forward, but the hitch-rein, being very short and restraining her freedom, caused her to rear up and come down with the pit of her stomach directly on top of the post she was tied to. There the excited animal stood on her hind feet while her forequarters were impaled upon the post. As she frantically pawed the air several men attempted to push the horse off, and in doing so split the top off the post, forming a sharp point that gouged its way deep into the animal's abdomen, making a wound over a foot long, from which blood in immense quantities poured out into the gutter. As the suffering brute groaned and lunged around with pain, a colored man cut the post off with a saw. Then the horse rolled over into the street and the stump was pulled out of her body, when she got on her feet and started off at a break-neck speed. Entrails protruding from the wound hung down upon the street, so that every jump the mare made she trampled upon her own vitals, and literally tore them foot by foot entirely out of her body, leaving them scattered all along her wild run. She finally fell and was killed, after six shots in the head from a policeman's revolver.

THE LITTLE ONE'S GRAVE.

In the spring of 1869, a little girl died of consumption in Frederick City, Md., aged 3 years and 3 months. A few days before she died she called her father to her bedside and said: "Papa, when I die, don't bury me deep—not more than so deep," holding out her tender and emaciated arm and measuring from her shoulder out. "Oh, it's so hard to be put down so deep in the cold, damp ground, and please don't put any marble slab on my grave, it will be so dark under it, and it will press so heavily on my little breast. Sod my grave nicely and plant a tree at its head, so that the wild birds can gather in its branches and sing for me." After a pause she continued: "But it seems to me I would rather have our own birds sing for me than the wild birds. Couldn't you let Brother Willie and Sister Emma bring our cage of little birds out to the cemetery every Sunday morning and leave them to sing for me all day? When you are at church in town it won't seem so lonesome out by myself." A few days after this Anna died, and her affectionate parent did everything as she requested: She was buried shallow, and the grave nicely sodded, and a tree planted at its head. And still every Sunday morning Willie and Emma can [illegible] with a [illegible]

RICH MEN OF ENGLAND.

How They Manage to Spend Their Millions.

[From the New York Sun.]

If rich people in England should see fit to bring down their domestic expenditure to that usual among families of similar means here, they would very soon be able not merely to recoup themselves for the losses of several bad harvests, but to save vast sums of money. In our large Eastern cities family men with anything under $25,000 a year spend more freely than Englishmen with the same income; but as regards those with incomes over that amount it is quite another matter. When Macaulay, before proceeding to India, consulted Sidney Smith's experienced brother, the famous "Bobus," as to expenses at Calcutta, he was told that he could not be comfortable under £3,000 a year, and he could not possibly get through £5,000. This is in a measure true of the United States. It might be safely asserted that in the whole of this country there are not five persons, if as many, who spend on their establishments $100,000. A careful estimate, made a year or two ago by persons eminently qualified to make it, brought such expenditure up to $95,000. It included a town house, a yacht, a villa at Newport, and a country seat.

What runs away with incomes of from $50,000 to $250,000 in England is the keeping up of country-seats, hounds, hospitality, and game preserves. At Drumlanrig Castle, for instance, one of its owner's ten residences, there are eighty miles of grass drive kept in order; at Gridge, more than forty. Add to these acres of garden and glass and the expenses of park-keepers and game-keepers, and it is easy to see where the money goes. If there is a hunting-establishment on a liberal scale at least $20,000 a year must be added.

Again, while the hospitality of an average well-to-do American favorably compares with that of an Englishman of similar means, that of the broad-acred Englishman is immensely superior to that of the American millionaire. The latter gives some dinner parties, and, perhaps, an annual ball, and keeps a dozen servants; the Englishman, on the other hand, beside constantly entertaining in town, often sits down to dinner for weeks at a time with twenty guests, staying, with their servants, in his country house, and feeds from fifty to sixty every day in his servants' hall with as much beef and beer as they please to consume. More than this he at times entertains whole schools and parishes, beside giving away hundreds of pounds in the shape of beef and blankets at Christmas. He subscribes, too, to every public charity in the county; sometimes in two or three counties.

Merely to take an example, there is Lord Derby, with ten men servants in his house and about forty more domestics feeding daily at his board. Supposing to-morrow he and his wife should agree to struggle along on $100,000 a year, he could save at least $800,000 a year; while were the Dukes of Westminster, Devonshire and Bedford to do likewise their savings would be still greater. Supposing Lord Derby to save at this rate for thirty years what an archi-millionaire he would become.

Twenty years ago there died a queer old bachelor, Lord Digby, who owned Raleigh's ill-fated home of Sherborne Castle. He was a most liberal landlord, but did not care to spend more than $35,000 a year, and let his money go on rolling up, investing it all in the 3 per cents. His income was not a fourth of Lord Derby's, but he left in the funds $4,500,000. As a rule a Peer leaves comparatively little behind him; $1,000,000 would be regarded an unusually large sum for a man with $400,000 a year to have, and there is but one case on record—that of Lord Dysart, an eccentric recluse—of a Peer leaving over $4,500,000 personally.

On very large properties the surplus income is chiefly expended in very costly improvements. Thus the Duke of Devonshire has built Eastbourne and much of Buxton. The Duke of Buccleuch has expended thousands at Granton, and both have put vast sums into enterprises connected with Barrow-in-Furness. About $10,000,000 of Lord Bute's has gone into docks at Cardiff. The late Lord Westminster built and rebuilt probably not less than 1,000 houses in ondon, and Northumberland and therlandshire reflect on all sides the erous expenditure of the Dukes of eir name; while beautiful churches, mmodious schools and handsome mesteads soon inform the traveler in ltshire and Bradfordshire that he is the broad domain of the Earl of Pembroke or the Duke of Bedferd. Had the vast sums thus spent been annually put into stocks, or bonds and mortgages, the present holders of the lands might have been richer men, but the country would have been in many respects the loser, and it would be a widely different looking region from what it is to-day.

THE CHOICE OF A SADDLE-HORSE.

The selection of a horse for the saddle is a common source of trouble to those wishing to commence riding. In the United States, at the present time, there is no lack of horses that with careful breaking could be made first-class saddle-horses. The racing stables of America furnish every year a number of horses not good enough to keep on in training, yet excellent for park-hacks or for light-weight hunters. These animals can always be bought at low rates, and when properly broken are safer and far more lasting than common-bred horses. Central America possesses a breed of ponies of rare beauty and docility—charming household pets for children. These little animals are not always to be found in the United States, and when here they are costly. For larger boys and girls, the mustang of the plains ought to be a favorite mount. Their many good qualities are not as yet fully recognized. The mustang is believed by many to be vicious, unruly, and, in consequence, unsafe for children; on the contrary, it is an intelligent, sturdy little creature, full of affection for a kind owner. Droves of mustangs are from time to time brought to New York by the great cattle-shippers, and in their wild state they are snapped up by city dealers at prices ranging from $8 to $40 per head.—The Century Magazine.

THE London Sporting Life says: "Veritably this has been an American year; our Derby gone, our Leger lost, and our double event, the Cæsarowitch and Cambridgeshire, likewise won by a 3-year-old born and bred on the other side of the Atlantic and sent to do battle for the stars and stripes—or, rather, in this instance I should say the green and white spots—in the land whence his ancestors were imported. And now for the application of all this. To begin with, it is very plain that with Iroquois and Foxhall we have had a considerable lot of the 'shine' taken out of us. * * * Large sums have been won over every American victory in this country, and the last success of Foxhall has been the crowning achievement. In the hands to which debts can be traced 66,000 soverigns, it is said, can be totaled up, while in the hands of the many sportsmen who combine their love of patriotism with speculation on the horses representing their country the amounts won would make up a vast total; not only in England, but in France, where the American element is very powerful, while in gay Columbia itself wagering on Foxhall and Iroquois has by no means been idle. Another deduction is that Americans have proved their ability to breed race horses of the higher class, and the supremacy of the British thoroughbred is without doubt seriously affected."

THE December number of The Century magazine contains a fac-simile of a memorable piece of writing by President Garfield—the "Strangulatus pro Republica" autograph, and in conjunction with it the following letter:

Editor of the Century Magazine.

DEAR SIR: The late President Garfield took pen or pencil in hand four times during his last illness.

1. Sunday, July 17, at noon, at his request for writing materials, I placed in his hand a clip and pencil. Lying on his back, and holding up the clip in his left hand, he then wrote his name and the prophetic words, "Strangulatus pro Republica," the fac-simile of which I now authorize you to publish. What epitaph more significant, eloquent and truthful than this—his own!

2. August 10, with a fountain pen, he wrote his name on a clip.

3. Immediately after, he signed an extradition paper, sent from the Department of State, first requesting me to read the document—the old habit of thoroughness asserting itself.

4. August 11, he wrote, on a larger clip, with a pencil, the brief letter to his mother, a copy of which has been widely circulated.

Very truly yours,

A. F. ROCKWELL.

ACTING on a theory that human beings were made to stand upright, and therefore ought never to lie down, a Californian sleeps in an apparatus which sustains him comfortably in a perpendicular position. A Nebraska physician is equally certain that the vital organs are injuriously affected by being jolted downward in walking, and to counteract this he gravely stands on his head five minutes every day.

BOGUS BRILLIANTS.

"How do your diamonds compare with the genuine?"

"Put them side by side and you can't tell them apart. Let me show you some samples," and the dealer turned to his iron safe and got out a box of unset "diamonds" of about three carats each. Handing the scribe a dainty pair of tweezers he requested him to examine the stones before the light. The reporter picked up one of the gems as carefully as though it were a $20,000 stone, and held it before his optics. It sparkled brilliantly, was cut perfectly, and anybody but an expert would suppose it to be a genuine diamond. The reporter was tempted to slip the stone up his sleeve, until he asked the price of it, when, getting the reply, "One dollar," he dropped it as though it was poisonous.

"Here are some thirty beautiful specimens," remarked the merchant as he unfolded another paper and laid before the scribe half a dozen stones about the size of a door-knob. These are worn principally by gamblers on account of their extraordinary size. "They come a great deal higher than those others I have shown you. I sell these at $2.50 apiece, or a pair of them for a serio-comic singer's earrings at $4.25. They are exceedingly brilliant, you see, and at night shine like a locomotive headlight. Here are a lot of little diamonds that sell from 25 to 75 cents each." "Are those made of paste or fishscales?" "Oh, no; I never deal in paste goods. These stones come from the Sierra Nevada mountains, and are cut and polished in New York; and some are even sent to Paris to be cut and are then returned to this country. They are the best imitation of the diamond made, and retain their brilliancy forever. Not being as hard as the diamond, care has to be taken in not getting them scratched." "You remarked before that the trade was simply immense. I suppose that the second or middle class of society are the greatest purchasers of these imitations?" "That's where you're wrong. The principal buyers and wearers of 'snide' diamonds are those who move in the highest society, and I'll tell you the reason why. Let a lady who counts her wealth by the hundreds of thousands appear in public with a pair of six or eight carat 'diamond' earrings, and the people never suspect that they are 'snide.' They imagine that because the wearer is wealthy she would never degrade herself by wearing $2 diamonds, but such is the case. Hundreds of times have I matched genuine diamonds for high-toned ladies, and it was actually impossible to tell them apart. You see, when a person of wealth wears 'snide' diamonds, you can hardly make people believe that they are anything else than genuine; while, on the other hand, let a person in more reduced circumstances wear genuine diamonds, and everybody they meet will turn up ther noses and remark that they are 'snide.' So that is the reason the people of wealth can throw on so much style with very little expense." —Cincinnati Times-Star.

PRESIDENT ROBERTS, of the Pennsylvania railroad, having given strict orders not to accept passes nor permit "dead heads" to travel on the fast limited express, took the train from New York the other day. The conductor on reaching the President of the road recognized him, lifted his hat and passed on. He was called back and asked what the rule was about collecting fares on this train. "No dead heads," said the conductor, and had no answer ready when the magnate asked him why he didn't collect his fare. He handed the conductor the money, saying that he meant the rule to be enforced, and he would not be the first to break it. This is very Spartan-like, although some may be skeptical as to what the President would have said if the conductor had attempted to collect his fare. He might have reproved him for not knowing his business or his place. The President of a railroad has a conductor "dead to rights" every time, although as a collector of fares the conductor has something the advantage of him.

THE famous spring of boiling water in the middle basin of Hell's Half Acre, in the Yellowstone region, has lately become still more wonderful as a geyser. Four or five times every twenty-four hours it discharges a great column of water, freighted with stones and obscured by a dense volume of steam. The hollow formation for hundreds of yards around the orifice trembles under the upheaval, and the water is thrown to a height of 100 feet.

THE bearing and training of a child is woman's wisdom.

Be constant—and thou chainest Time forever.

THE most miserable pettifogging in the world is that of a man in the court of his own conscience.

A NOBLE deed is a step toward God,
Lifting the soul from the common sod
To a purer air and a broader view.

HE that wrestles with us strengthens our nerves and sharpens our skill. Our antagonist is our helper.

THE tear down childhood's cheek that flows
Is like the dewdrop on the rose;
When next the summer breeze comes by
And waves the bush, the flower is dry.

BE thou like the bird perched upon some frail thing; although he feels the branch bending beneath him yet loudly sings, knowing full well that he has wings.

IT is astonishing how soon the whole conscience begins to unravel if a single stitch drops; one single sin indulged in makes a hole you could put your head through.

WHO blesses others in his daily deeds
Will find the healing that his spirit needs,
For every flower in others, pathway thrown
Confers its fragrant beauty on our own.

WHERE God hath put exquisite tinge upon the shell washed in the surf, and planted a paradise of bloom in a child's cheek let us leave it to the owl to hoot, and the frog to croak, and the fault finder to complain.

THE luster of diamonds is invigorated by the interposition of darker bodies; the lights of a picture are created by the shades. The highest pleasure which nature has indulged to sensitive perception is that of rest after fatigue.

MONEY AND IGNORANCE.

The consolation of wealth without learning is quite sufficient for a good many grander proprietors than the one who figures in this descriptive item. Riches are made to cover up a multitude of deficiencies—and a good many sins. A Chicago paper says that a colored man, living in that city, hung out a sign on his house reading:

"For sail." He happened to be at the gate when a white man came along and said:

"You'll never get an offer for your house with any such spelling as that."

The owner of the place was greatly puzzled to improve the orthography, but finally took his wife's advice and made it read, "For sell."

This seemed to be all right for a day or two, and then a schoolboy halted and said:

"If you don't fix that sign, all the school children will be laughing at you."

There was another convention of the family to see where the mistake came in, and the sign was made to read. "Fur Sall." It hadn't been up an hour when an old colored man came along and queried:

"Does you mean dat dis place am fur Sally? What you gwine to gib de place to Sally fur?"

"Am you findin' fault wid dat sign?" asked the other.

"Well, I doan' quite cotch on to de spellin'."

"You doan', eh? Has you got $700 to pay cash for dis place?"

"No, sah."

"Den you pass on an' shet up. Maybe I doan' spell jist de same as you du, but I'ze got prospects of handlin' $700, while you have got boaf knees out to de weather. I doan' ker to use high-flown language an' have to w'ar a shoe on one fut an' a bute on de odder. Go 'long, ole man."—Youth's Companion.

AN OLD STORY.

Every story comes from another story. That of the ragged and thirsty tramp, who went up to a bartender and said, "Say, Mister, give me a drink and have some fun with me," is based on a speech of Callidemus in Macaulay's "Athenian Revels." He says to his son Speusippus, "What! I suppose you will wander from house to house, like that wretched buffoon, Phillippus, and beg everybody who has a supper party to be so kind as to feed you and laugh at you." Thus the story goes back to Plato's time, for Plato is the character mentioned in Xenophon's "Symposium."

"A woman at the bottom of it." We read a telegram the other day telling of a duel which had just taken place somewhere in Kentucky, and which telegram closed with the above hackneyed phrase. These words are generally to be found at the close of every telegram of like kind which one reads; and it is a great pity that some one does not invent a new phrase. Our humble opinion is that the women of the land save far more souls than are sent to hell through their agency. But whenever two fools see fit to shoot at one another on account of some giddy woman who doesn't know which one she likes best, or who, in all probability, doesn't care a snap of her finger for either, the telegraphic crank, with never the least scrupulosity, publishes to the world that such woman has been the cause of the shooting or killing of one or other of the parties. Fortunately, the barbarous practice of duelling is on its last legs, and with this fact in view, there may be "balm in Gilead" yet.

OUR STATE FINANCES.

The Report of Auditor Carmichael for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1881, appears in the Montgomery Advertiser. He reports:

Total collections for the year, $964,741.78. Total amount paid out for the year, $874,174.61. The net surplus for the year is, $90,567.17. Balance in the Treasury last year, $314,004.84. Balance in the Treasury this year, $404,586.96. The collections this year have been in excess of last year, $37,930.28. The Auditor reports that the better condition of the Treasury is due to the adjustment of a number of outstanding matters of indebtedness, the levy and collection of the railroad license tax, and the early reports of tax collectors. "It results, therfore," says the Auditor, "that the cash receipts of the Treasury for the year are about $100,000 in excess of the estimates made by my worthy and able predecessor in office."

The total bonded debt is $9,111,500, on which the total annual interest for next five years will be 322,295 dollars. The Auditor says that the State can meet this interest. After paying all probable expenditures there will still be a balance in the Treasury this year, from the results of the year, and without including the 404,586 dollars balance left oyer from last year.

The Auditor says there are many grave defects in the revenue laws, but he thinks that if assessors come up squarely and boldly to their duties it will go far to strengthen and improve the revenue system.

Nearly all the tax collectors have been prompt and faithful in the discharge of their duties. The valuations of property in all parts of the State have increased. The Auditor expresses confidence that the prosperity of our people is such that we can meet the advance in interest on our debt five years hence, without increasing taxation.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 16.

The Mormon question thrusts itself upon Congress in a very positive manner, and like Banquo's ghost it will not down. Doubtless a majority are against the infamous institution of polygamy and willing to see its political power destroyed, yet somehow there is a disposition to handle the subject rather gingerly. I shall not be surprised if the present agitation ends in smoke and inaction, as all previous attempts have done. It takes something like an earthquake to inspire Congress to do its duty in dealing with any great evil which possesses power and influence. The plan proposed by Delegate Maginnis, of Montana, appears to be the least violent and effective of any suggested so far. His proposition is to let Congress divide the Territory of Utah, incorporating the western part with the State of Colorado, and the small northern part with the State of Nevada, the southeastern part with the State of Colorado, and the small northern part with Idaho and Wyoming. Congress has abundant power to do this, and it is evident that when it is done the Mormon power will be broken. A part of the Mormon population will be then citizens of Nevada, and will be there only a minority of the whole State, and part will become citizens of Colorado, in a minority there. The small remainder will form a part of Wyoming or Idaho. The main portion of the Mormon population would thus become citizens of States which have already established constitutions and laws, to which the Mormons would be amendable. It is held that such a division of Utah and distribution of its parts would not only be perfectly legal and proper, but would have the advantage that the new boundaries would be natural instead of artificial. The Watch Range, which now runs through the centre of Utah, would then form the boundary line between the States of Colorado and Nevada. Is there any reason why Utah should not thus be blotted out of the map?

If John Sherman has not been cornered this time people would like to know what it is that makes him squirm so. Ever since the investigation into the contingent fund expenditures of the Treasury Department was instituted John has been wriggling and twisting, and the inquiry has been embarrassed at every turn by obstacles interposed in his interest. His first step, it will be remembered, was to secure a suppression of the evidence accompanying the report of Secretary Windom's little committee of clerks last summer. Enough of that evidence has leaked out, however, in one way or another, to show that the late Secretary and Presidential aspirant had good reasons for wishing to keep it dark. The Senate Committee conducting this investigation sits with closed doors, so that very little is really known of what transpires within; but some things come out through the key-hole, or somewhere else, which indicate that "paying dirt," as they say in the mines, has been struck. The Republican members of the Committee, who are in a majority, asserted with great vehemence at the start that nothing should be done in the dark—that the public should know just what was going on—yet, just as a matter of precaution, you know, to keep the newspapers from telling the truth, they voted to double-lock and seal the doors.

The Alabama Great Southern railroad gave the Cincinati Southern 8,000,000 pounds more freight than it received from that road during the past year.

Wm. H. Locke, Postmaster at Eufaula, committed suicide by shooting himself through the head. He was under indictment for robbing the government.

Professor S. M. Ainsworth, of Athens, committted suicide on last Monday, by stabbing himself four times in the region of the heart. He was a ripe scholar, and for years has been in bad health.

A special State Sunday school convention will be held in Montgomery, on the 7th and 8th of February. Arrangements will be made for the entertainment of all delegates who may attend. The place of meeting in Montgomery will be the First Baptist Church.

Tuskaloosa is taking the lead of every town in the State as a manufacturing centre. It now has in operation two large cotton factories, a gin factory, a yarn and rope factory, a saw mill, and will soon have a boiler factory and another saw mill.

The Selma Times man is getting demoralized. On last Saturday he stood in the rain and looked on at a dog fight "until," he says, "both animals were as bloody as hogs," (by way of parenthesis, we didn't know that all hogs were bloody) "and were badly chewed up about the throat and legs." He probably imagined the poor brutes were Roman gladiators and was afraid to interfere, lest they should "go for" him.

It is rumored in Birmingham that a movement is on foot to unite the Alice furnace, the Eureka furnace, the Sloss furnace, now being built, and several more to be constructed, the whole to be under control of a company with a capital of $10,000,000. It is understood that Mr. DeBardeleben, who recently sold the Pratt mines to a Memphis company for $1,000,000, is the prime mover in this great consolidation. There are to be six furnaces in the combination.

Among the distinguished citizens who ever receive a cordial welcome to Montgomery is Hon. John M. Martin, of Tuscaloosa, who has been here for a day or two on professional engagements. During the perilous times that tested the virtue and patience of our people, he stood at his post in the State Senate, a 'tower of strength,' and his services during those memorable four years, will remain indelibly impressed upon the minds of the people.

As a noble gentleman, patriotic citizen and wise, and incorruptible legislator, he will ever be cherished, as he deserves, by the people of Alabama.—Montgomery Advertiser.

Mr. James M. Scott expects to be off for the Clanton Academy, in a few days. Why can't Jemison have as good a school as Clanton, or any other place.

"The nature of fried wool is inexplicable," which accounts for Billy Wilson being able to sell more goods for less money than any merchant in this section. p1t

We received a pleasant call on last Friday from Mr. S. E. Hirscher, traveling agent of the Montgomery Music Bazar. Mr. Child, the proprietor of this substantial establishment keeps well posted in musical matters, and any one needing music or musical instruments should order from him.

Master Andy Durbin, a fourteen year old son of Mrs. Durbin, living about eight miles west of Clanton, accidentally shot himself in the right hand, last Wednesday. His gun was lying on the ground, and he caught hold of the muzzle to pick it up, when it was discharged by the hammer striking a stump. The contents of one barrel entered the palm his right hand, and it is probable he will lose that member.

We learn that the trunk containing deeds, $20 in gold and other valuables, which we stated last week had been stolen from Mr. Darby Riggins, of the Strasburg neighborhood, was returned to his premises, last Sunday evening, after the money had been abstracted, and we learn that this was also returned later. This kind of "embezzlement" is certainly "something new under the sun," and can only be accounted for upon the supposition that the thief might have read the item in the VIEW, and been frightened into repentance.

Messrs. J. F. Maull and J. H. Hockinsmith have formed a copartnership and opened a new and extensive stock of general merchandise, at their old stand, in Clanton. They offer bargains, and should receive a liberal patronage. Read advertisement elsewhere in this issue.

Henry James, a negro working at Blassingame's saw mill, a few miles from town, was accidentally shot last Tuesday morning. He was in the act of placing a pistol on the mantel, when it fell to the floor, struck on the hammer and was discharged, the ball entering his knee. Dr. Lanier, who attended him, informs us that the ball cannot be extracted, and that the loss of the limb will probably result.

Verbena is talking of erecting a hotel and an academy, all in one breath. The idea is, nevertheless, a good one, and one we would like to see carried out. If we might be allowed to make a suggestion it would be, that a building be erected suitable for an academy, with the second story divided into rooms for boarding pupils, and during the summer or vacation months the building could be used as a hotel. Thus one building could serve both purposes. We think it would be a paying investment. In fact, we believe that "there's millions in it," and all that keeps us from "investing" ourselves is that our sole stock of cash consists of a five cent piece with a hole in it. Build your hotel gentlemen, and we will then move the VIEW down, and bring our five cent piece too.

MAPLESVILLE DOTS.

Our young folks had a pound party at Mr. Gus King's.

Mr. J. W. Jackson has returned to his old position as master of this section of the E. T., V. & G. railroad.

Mr. Walter Lawrence is now in Nashville attending a commercial college.

Mrs. Walter Oliver, of Shelby county, is visiting relatives near this place.

After sixteen years dealing in liquor, Mr. N. W. Foshee has discontinued the business until next fall.

Mr. W. Bowline now announces that he has settled with his creditors and resumed business.

Our young friend A. S. Cobern, of Benson, passed through a few days ago en route with his bride to Dallas county.

We hope our town will no longer be the resort of drunkards and bad men wanting whiskey, since the traffic has stopped here.

Died, in Brown county, Texas, on the 27th ult., Mrs. Emma E. Lee. Mrs. Lee was a daughter of Prof. J. L. Williams, our county surveyor, and once belonged to this community. Her large circle of acquaintances will deeply regret her loss. BIJOU.

LETTER FROM TEXAS.

PALO PINTO, TEX., Dec. 30, '81.

ED. CHILTON VIEW: Dear Sir—A friend has sent me a copy of your interesting paper. It came to my far western home from the land of my nativity, filled with interesting news, and was like getting a letter from home, and I wish you to enter me as a subscriber at once.

I see in the copy sent me many familiar names, which called to mind friends whom I am glad to know are yet on the sunny side of terra firma. I see that one of your correspondents speaks hopefully of the pea, pumpkin, possum and pinder crop. Also, of the late harvest of red-headed children. Now, Mr. Editor, we Texans know something about the latter crop, but if we read your paper, we will have to insist on that granger correspondent furnishing us with a copy of his dictionary. We can understand when a man speaks of the North Carolina prodnctions of tare, hooppolls and pumpkins or of Georgia goobers, but when it comes to Alabama pinders, we are lost in the woods.

Sir, with your permission, I will furnish your readers, from time to time, with short items from this part of the west. I wish to say to all my friends and relatives to address me at Palo Pinto, Palo Pinto county, Texas.

OSCAR F. GRAGG.

VERBENA VIEWS.

Having been restricted, exclusively, to local news, your Verbena correspondent is, this week, somewhat at a loss for "views" that would interest your readers.

We hear the subject of the erection, in the near future, of a hotel in Verbena, earnestly discussed, and it may be regarded as pretty certain, that by the 15th of June next, Verbena will be prepared to receive and entertain all the summer visitors who may come for health and recreation.

We learn, also, that the importance of building an academy, is beginning to take hold upon the minds of our citizens. With a large and commodious hotel, and an academy suitably adapted to the wants of education our beautiful and healthy town will have made a long stride in the march of improvement.

We learn that Mr. Brooks has abandoned the project of building a new store; that the one he now occupies, would be enlarged, renovated and fully adapted to his increasing business.

Mrs. Lynch, the relict of a deceased Methodist minister, has recently moved to Verbena, and now occupies the residence, vacated by Mrs. McLemore.

Mr. Willis, of our town, will leave in a few days, and engage in the arduous task of teaching young ideas how to shoot.

The Baptist Church of Verbena, has called the Rev. Mr. Falkner to preach two Sabbaths in the month, during the ensuing year—the 1st and 3d.

Rev. Mr. Taul, of Wetumpka, will preach in Verbena, the 5th Sabbath in this mouth.

Since your Mountain Creek correspondent has taken from me my nom de plume, I will in future scribble over that of LOCAL.

ANOTHER QUERY.

We have received the following query, with an accompanying note asking for a reply in the next issue of THE VIEW:

MR. EDITOR:—What does it take to be an editor? I think I would make a good newspaper editor, and want to try my hand at it.

NIX.

Well, "Nix," we will do our best for you. But first, we would advise you to throw up the idea of becoming an editor yourself—as Parson Talmage would say, you had better get your friends to examine into your condition, or you may soon be a fit subject for an insane asylum. But to reply: To be an editor requires the cheek and backbone of an Egyptian rhinoceros, together with that animal's toughness of hide, in order to ward off the stray bullets that will occasionally come in his way. To be an editor, one should be the best lawyer in the country; he will have to plead his own cases, if any body does, for he will never have money enough to employ a lawyer. Editors know this and are generally good pleaders. We have seen editors who could make a jury weep a quart of tears, where Tom Watts or Pope Walker couldn't make them stop eating peanuts. An editor must also be a good doctor and be able to cure every known ill that flesh is heir to, from hydrophobia or small pox to a corn on the little toe. He must be a good cook and a good house keeper, unless he can lay claim to the interesting "better-half." We have known editors who had taken better-halves ostensibly for the purpose of having their old socks darned, and shirts repaired, that have been sadly disappointed. Hence, an editor should know how to sew, and how to wash his own clothes, and is expected to live on one ear of corn a whole year without grumbling. He is expected to know everything and to tell every man he meets all that he knows, or there'll be war. An editor is generally thought to be a very popular man, and he sometimes is, especially among those who are anxious to be "puffed" in his paper, but we wouldn't advise you to join the "fourth estate," on that account "Nix." For if an editor doesn't see fit to puff such individuals, he is damned by them. and his paper "refused," and if he does puff them, he is damned by those he may have omitted to notice. In fact, he is generally damned by everybody, and is, nevertheless, expected to die shouting.

So we would advise you to look well, friend "Nix," before you leap upon the editorial tripod, for woe is to be found there unbeknown to any, save those who have "tried their hand." We do not speak from experience, but from many years close observation of, and companionship with, editors; all of whom were more or less alike and each more or less possessed with the "devil."

You will find the most complete stock of Hats, Furnishing Goods, Trunks and Valises at Wellman & Co.'s Louisville Clothing House, on 1st Avenue, Birmingham.

[For The Chilton View.]

"LOVEST THOU ME?"

"Lovest thou me more than these."—St. John 21:15.

More than these;
Lord what is human love compared to thine;
Thou givest me life and immortality,
Thy peace, and hope and heaven is even mine;
Throughout the realms of vast eternity.
Yea, even while wandering o'er life's dreary waste,
Thy loving care upholds the fainting heart,
And gives the weary, struggling soul a taste
Of heavenly joy that earth can ne'er impart.

Love thee my Master?
Yea what are all earth's highest, richest treasures,
Its fame, its honor or its glittering gold;
Its triumphs, or its transient flitting pleasures,
When thou such sweeter, purer joys unfold.
Lord it is joy and untold bliss to know
Thou hold'st me in the hollow of thy hand,
That thou on me the riches of thy love bestow,
And I may follow at thy blest command.

Love thee my Master?
Dear Lord my wayward footsteps often go,
In paths forbidden and in ways not meet;
Yet in my sinful heart, I love thee so,
I fain would humbly kneel and kiss thy feet,
Thou who hast died, thou who thy life hath given,
Thy matchless love on sinner to bestow.
The rock of sin and unbelief hath riven;
Dear Lord I love—help me to love thee more.

WHY may a tipsy man fall into the river with impunity? Because he won't drown as long as his head swims.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR was once a schoolmaster. Some of the officeholders are anxious to know whether they are to be "kept in."

"RICHES have wings," and they need them to keep up with the man who has started a daily paper to fill a long-felt want. And without their wings he generally gets clear out of sight of them.

A NEWLY-MARRIED couple, riding in a carriage, were overturned, whereupon a standerby said it was "A shocking sight." "Yes," said the gentleman, "to see those just wedded fall out so soon."

AT the medical examination: "How should you detect prussic acid among other substances?" "By breathing it," answers the candidate. "If I died immediately, I should know prussic acid was present."

EVE wasn't unhappy in the Garden of Eden because she had nothing to wear, "because," she said, "what's the good of nice clothes, when there are no other women to envy you?" That's what galled Eve.

THE gentleman who came to this office to talk on the necessity of reform and absent-mindedly carried off a black silk umbrella, in mistake for a blue gingham one, will please call and correct the error.—Philadelphia News.

A HUSBAND advertises thus: "My wife Maria, has strayed or been stolen. Whoever returns her will get his head broke. As to trusting her, anybody can do so if they see fit; for, as I never pay my own debts, it's not likely I'll pay her'n."

DICKY had been silent during his Thanksgiving dinner, but finally he rested his fat elbows on the table, with knife and fork upright in either hand, and gave a great sigh and said, "I wish turkeys could be made double-breasted."

"AH," said an Englishman the other day, "I belong to a country upon which the sun never sets." "And I," said a Yankee, "belong to a country of which there can be no correct map—it grows so fast that surveyors can't keep up with it."

X., WITH his wife and a friend, is seated on the beach, when a passing gentleman bows to the friend. "That is Monsieur R.," he says, "the eminent divorce lawyer, who has never lost a case." "Ah!" cried X. and his wife in the same breath, "present us!"

TWO YEARS hence an entirely new system of railroads from ocean to ocean will be in operation, and already the better part of the great chain is completed. The termini will be New York and San Francisco. The roads forming the routes will be the New York, West Shore and Buffalo, the New York, Buffalo and Chicago, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Northern Pacific and the Oregon Navigation Company's lines. The system will be in direct opposition to the Vanderbilt lines and Union Pacific railroad, and it is claimed for it that it will run through the part of the country that supplies the greatest amount of travel and freight business. The Eastern line will be the New York, West Shore and Buffalo railway, extending from New York to Buffalo. The West Shore, as it is called, will be a powerful rival of the New York Central and Hudson River railroad. The length of the road will be 425 miles—some sixteen miles shorter than the Central. The road is to be straighter than the Central, and the projectors assert that the running time will be decreased at least one hour between New York and Buffalo. The West Shore is under contract to Syracuse, and the work of construction is being vigorously prosecuted on all sections. Just as soon as the surveys can be made west of Syracuse work will be begun. Trains will be running from New York to Albany on the west shore of the Hudson river next summer, and by the middle of 1882 the entire line will be in operation. The road will be double-tracked from one end to the other. Steel rails will be laid and the bridges will be of iron.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD, when he for the last time entered the Washington railway station, carried a small hand-trunk which he had packed himself. His widow preserves it as he left it, and will not allow it to be unpacked.

Do'st thou love life? Then do not squander valuable time, for that is the stuff life is made of; but procure at once a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup for your cough and be cured. Your druggist keeps it.

PETER PARLEY'S GRAVE.

The parents of our young readers remember "Peter Parley's Magazine," "Robert Merry's Museum" that succeeded it, which was finally absorbed in the Youth's Companion. The genial old author of these once-popular publications, once the delight of thousands of children, now sleeps without a monument—save in the good name and the loved and useful record he left to the world.

His grave lies almost unmarked on the Connecticut hillside. Once, while he was traveling in the West, a wealthy lady, at a festival in St. Louis given in his honor, complimented him as a benefactor of his race, and promised to erect a monument to his memory. That memorial has never been built. The good man's monument is in the loving hearts that, forty years ago, were his delighted readers and pupils.

It is well to remind the young of the present day where his ashes rest. At a very short distance from the "Goodrich Place," at Southberry, Ct., is a rural graveyard. Here and there, scattered in among the long grass, are mounds, where lie buried the forgotten dead. Now and then some modern shaft tells of those lately mourned, and once in a while some fine monument attracts the visitor's eye.

Within this incloseure is a small plot, fenced in with stern simplicity. Two costly but plain slabs of marble stand within. On one is a name and two dates, and the emblem is an open book with two or three dog-eared leaves. There lies "Peter Parley," world-known and world-loved; how few can tell where are shrined his mortal remains! Yet this was his choice. With the modesty of great minds, he shrunk from praise or publicity, and unsung, though not unhonored, he lies in a country graveyard.—Philadelphia Saturday Night.

Its Equal is Unknown.

A Lowell (Mass.) paper, so we observe, cites the case of Mr. P. H. Short, proprietor of the Belmont Hotel, that city, who suffered with rheumatism for seventeen years without finding relief from any of the numerous remedies employed, until he applied St. Jacobs Oil: "I never found any medicine that produced such remarkable and instantaneous effect as it did," says Mr. Short.—Lyons (Ia.) Mirror.

A WIFE WHO IS TOO GOOD FOR ANYTHING.

"My wife," says Tom Arter, "is just too good for this earth—that's all there is about it. There isn't an angel in the suburbs of Heaven that can hold a candle to her in pure and cussed unadulterated goodness. Whatever she does or says is right, dead, unqualifiedly and emphatically right. Unborn babies and people who have lived long in their graves may do wrong, but Mrs. Arter never does. She is simply immaculate and most infernally infallible.

"She never told a lie—that is, she says she never did, and I value the remnant of hair on my head too valuable to dispute her. She can go walloping around among the neighbors, and gabble gossip and swap scandals and break commandments, and it's all right. She can wallop young Tom until he has to stand up for his breakfast for weeks at a clip, and it's all right. She can open a can of oysters with my razor and give away my best pants for a peck of peaches, and it's all right.

"But just let me commit an indiscretion no bigger than a pinhead, and I am the almightiest villain that ever breathed. Just let me go home feeling like I had been the butt end of a piledriver all day, and remark that I'm tired, I'm the most unmitigated liar on the globe. Just let me spank Tom the least bit, and I'm the ungainliest brute unhung. Let me spend 5 cents for a glass of beer to cool my parched lips, and I'm a scoundrel whom it would be base flattery to call Guiteau.

"Fact is, she's too good, and I'm too mean. Young Tom is just middling, I reckon, and may grow up worth something. If he does it will be a miracle. One parent with shining, silver wings about to soar for Heaven every minute, and the other on the brink of Hades ready to drop, it is hard to say what the boy will come to, and he so young, too! Well, there's a point somewhere when a woman can get too good. She's nearing that line on the lightning express."

A Boy's Luck.

The Norristown (Pa.) Herald in a recent issue referred among others, to the following cases of special interest. They are their own commentary. Mr. Samuel C. Nyce resides at 308 Marshall street, and holds the responsible position of journal clerk in the Pennsylvania Legislature, at Harrisburg. While Mr. Nyce and family were in the country recently, his boy, aged three years, fell and broke his leg. He recovered, but a very troublesome stiffness set in and he could scarcely use the leg. The injured limb was rubbed several times with St. Jacobs Oil, and the stiffness was so much reduced that the boy was able to use his leg freely. Dr. Knipe said it was the use of St. Jacobs Oil that cured the stiffness. Mr. Nyce himself used the Great German Remedy for toothache with good effect, and also for a sprain and pains of rheumatic nature, and always with good effect. Mrs. Nyce also says she thinks the Oil is a splendid thing, and she always keeps it on hand.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

THURLOW WEED lately passed his 84th birthday, and the veteran politician spent the greater part of it receiving the numerous friends who called to offer him the congratulations to which the occasion gave rise. The first to appear was Mr. Hill, a retired merchant living at Weymouth, Mass. He is only four years the junior of Mr. Weed, and the two had not met for seventy-three years, having been boys together at Catskill. Mr. Weed's sight is failing, but his memory has not suffered the slightest impairment. To a reporter who inquired regarding his habits of life, Mr. Weed said: "When I was a printer, in my earlier days, I was an abstainer from all beverages supposed to be intoxicating, even from beer. This was not because I regarded total abstinence as a virtue, but because I had no taste for drink. I used to see my fellow-workmen take their beer and I never thought it my business to find fault with them because they liked it and I didn't. In later years I became an inveterate smoker, and the caricatures of me always represented me with a big cigar in my mouth. I never used tobacco in any other form. About twelve years ago I had a spell of sickness, and when I was getting well my physician advised me to leave off smoking. I have not smoked since. In fact, I have felt no desire for tobacco since. For a number of years I have taken a little wine with my dinner."

Deprive a drunkard of his dram for three days and meanwhile give him plenty of Rock Spring Water, and he won't want the whisky. Don't you think it's worth trying it? If you do drop a postal to Ellis & Co. It will cost only a cent.

Poverty and Distress.

That poverty which produces the greatest distress is not of the purse but of the blood. Deprived of its richness it becomes scant and watery, a condition termed anemia in medical writings. Given this condition, and scrofulous swellings and sores, general and nervous debility, loss of flesh and appetite, weak lungs, throat disease, spitting of blood and consumption, are among the common results. If you are suffering from thin, poor blood employ Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which enriches the blood and cures these grave affections. Is more nutritive than cod liver oil, and is harmless in any condition of the system, yet powerful to cure. By druggists.

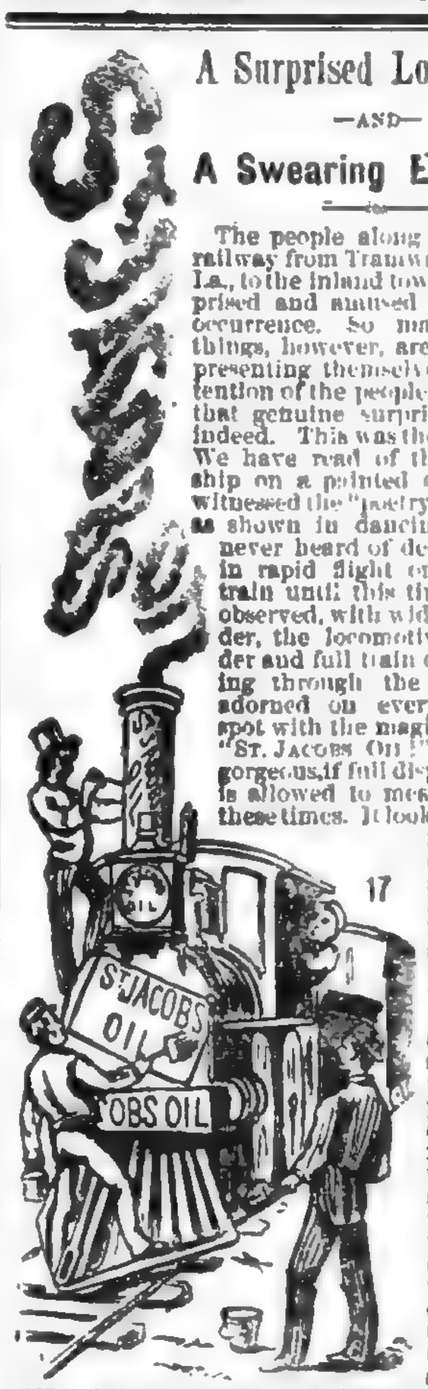
A Surprised Locomotive
—AND—
A Swearing Engineer



The people along the line of railway from Tramway Landing La., to the inland towns were surprised and amused at a recent occurrence. So many strange things, however, are constantly presenting themselves to the attention of the people now-a-days that genuine surprises are few indeed. This was the exception. We have read of the "painted ship on a painted ocean," and witnessed the "poetry of motion," as shown in dancing but had never heard of decorative art in rapid flight on a railway train until this time. People observed, with wide-eyed wonder, the locomotive and tender and full train of cars moving through the country, adorned on every available spot with the magical words—"ST. JACOBS OIL!" It looked gorgeous, if full display of color is allowed to mean anything these times. It looked sublime, if the impudence of the advertising man be the measuring standard. It looked funny to see the train and engine swathed with these parti-colored rheumatic wrappings; and at a convenient opportunity our correspondent inquired of the conductor what it all meant.

"Why, it means that my whole train looks like a traveling menagerie," said the conductor. "I laid up my train at Tramway, as usual, and during the hours of 'balmy sleep,' I suppose some of those advertising wretches backed up their 'kit' and posted it from front to rear. I don't know why they did it; but there stands the elongated, red and yellow facts staring you in the face, and just as prominent as a rabbit's ears! It's hard luck stranger, but I guess it's all right." —Galveston (Tex.) Daily Journal.

GENTLEMEN: I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit. J. P. WATSON, Pastor Christian Church, Troy, O.

Dicky had been silent during his Thanksgiving dinner, but finally he rested his fat elbows on the table, with knife and fork upright in either hand, and gave a great sigh and said, "I wish turkeys could be made double-breasted."

"Ah," said an Englishman the other day, "I belong to a country upon which the sun never sets." "And I," said a Yankee, "belong to a country of which there can be no correct map—it grows so fast that surveyors can't keep up with it."

X., with his wife and a friend, is seated on the beach, when a passing gentleman bows to the friend. "That is Monsieur R.," he says, "the eminent divorce lawyer, who has never lost a case." "Ah!" cried X. and his wife in the same breath, "present us!"

Two years hence an entirely new system of railroads from ocean to ocean will be in operation, and already the better part of the great chain is completed. The termini will be New York and San Francisco. The roads forming the routes will be the New York, West Shore and Buffalo, the New York, Buffalo and Chicago, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Northern Pacific and the Oregon Navigation Company's lines. The system will be in direct opposition to the Vanderbilt lines and Union Pacific railroad, and it is claimed for it that it will run through the part of the country that supplies the greatest amount of travel and freight business. The Eastern line will be the New York, West Shore and Buffalo railway, extending from New York to Buffalo. The West Shore, as it is called, will be a powerful rival of the New York Central and Hudson River railroad. The length of the road will be 425 miles—some sixteen miles shorter than the Central. The road is to be straighter than the Central, and the projectors assert that the running time will be decreased at least one hour between New York and Buffalo. The West Shore is under contract to Syracuse, and the work of construction is being vigorously prosecuted on all sections. Just as soon as the surveys can be made west of Syracuse work will be begun. Trains will be running from New York to Albany on the west shore of the Hudson river next summer, and by the middle of 1882 the entire line will be in operation. The road will be double-tracked from one end to the other. Steel rails will be laid and the bridges will be of iron.

President Garfield, when he for the last time entered the Washington railway station, carried a small hand-trunk which he had packed himself. His widow preserves it as he left it, and will not allow it to be unpacked.

Do'st thou love life? Then do not squander valuable time, for that is the stuff life is made of; but procure at once a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup for your cough and be cured. Your druggist keeps it.

PETER PARLEY'S GRAVE.

The parents of our young readers remember "Peter Parley's Magazine," "Robert Merry's Museum" that succeeded it, which was finally absorbed in the Youth's Companion. The genial old author of these once-popular publications, once the delight of thousands of children, now sleeps without a monument,—save in the good name and the loved and useful record he left to the world.

His grave lies almost unmarked on the Connecticut hillside. Once, while he was traveling in the West, a wealthy lady, at a festival in St. Louis given in his honor, complimented him as a benefactor of his race, and promised to erect a monument to his memory. That memorial has never been built. The good man's monument is in the loving hearts that, forty years ago, were his delighted readers and pupils.

It is well to remind the young of the present day where his ashes rest. At a very short distance from the "Goodrich Place," at Southberry, Ct., is a rural graveyard. Here and there, scattered in among the long grass, are mounds, where lie buried the forgotten dead. Now and then some modern shaft tells of those lately mourned, and once in a while some fine monument attracts the visitor's eye.

Within this inclosure is a small plot, fenced in with stern simplicity. Two costly but plain slabs of marble stand within. On one is a name and two dates, and the emblem is an open book with two or three dog-eared leaves. There lies "Peter Parley," world-known and world-loved; how few can tell where are shrined his mortal remains! Yet this was his choice. With the modesty of great minds, he shrunk from praise or publicity, and unsung, though not unhonored, he lies in a country graveyard.—Philadelphia Saturday Night.

Its Equal is Unknown.

A Lowell (Mass.) paper, so we observe, cites the case of Mr. P. H. Short, proprietor of the Belmont Hotel, that city, who suffered with rheumatism for seventeen years without finding relief from any of the numerous remedies employed, until he applied St. Jacobs Oil: "I never found any medicine that produced such remarkable and instantaneous effect as it did," says Mr. Short.—Lyons (Ia.) Mirror.

A WIFE WHO IS TOO GOOD FOR ANYTHING.

"My wife," says Tom Arter, "is just too good for this earth—that's all there is about it. There isn't an angel in the suburbs of Heaven that can hold a candle to her in pure and cussed unadulterated goodness. Whatever she does or says is right, dead, unqualifiedly and emphatically right. Unborn babies and people who have lived long in their graves may do wrong, but Mrs. Arter never does. She is simply immaculate and most infernally infallible.

"She never told a lie—that is, she says she never did, and I value the remnant of hair on my head too valuable to dispute her. She can go walloping around among the neighbors, and gabble gossip and swap scandals and break commandments, and it's all right. She can wallop young Tom until he has to stand up for his breakfast for weeks at a clip, and it's all right. She can open a can of oysters with my razor and give away my best pants for a peck of peaches, and it's all right.

"But just let me commit an indiscretion no bigger than a pinhead, and I am the almightiest villain that ever breathed. Just let me go home feeling like I had been the butt end of a pile-driver all day, and remark that I'm tired, I'm the most unmitigated liar on the globe. Just let me spank Tom the least bit, and I'm the ungainliest brute unhung. Let me spend 5 cents for a glass of beer to cool my parched lips, and I'm a scoundrel whom it would be base flattery to call Guiteau.

"Fact is, she's too good, and I'm too mean. Young Tom is just middling, I reckon, and may grow up worth something. If he does it will be a miracle. One parent with shining, silver wings about to soar for Heaven every minute, and the other on the brink of Hades ready to drop, it is hard to say what the boy will come to, and he so young, too! Well, there's a point somewhere when a woman can get too good. She's nearing that line on the lightning express."

A Boy's Luck.

The Norristown (Pa.) Herald in a recent issue referred among others, to the following cases of special interest. They are their own commentary. Mr. Samuel C. Nyce resides at 308 Marshall street, and holds the responsible position of journal clerk in the Pennsylvania Legislature, at Harrisburg. While Mr. Nyce and family were in the country recently, his boy, aged three years, fell and broke his leg. He recovered, but a very troublesome stiffness set in and he could scarcely use the leg. The injured limb was rubbed several times with St. Jacobs Oil, and the stiffness was so much reduced that the boy was able to use his leg freely. Dr. Knipe said it was the use of St. Jacobs Oil that cured the stiffness. Mr. Nyce himself used the Great German Remedy for toothache with good effect, and also for a sprain and pains of rheumatic nature, and always with good effect. Mrs. Nyce also says she thinks the Oil is a splendid thing, and she always keeps it on hand.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

Thurlow Weed lately passed his 84th birthday, and the veteran politician spent the greater part of it receiving the numerous friends who called to offer him the congratulations to which the occasion gave rise. The first to appear was Mr. Hill, a retired merchant living at Weymouth, Mass. He is only four years the junior of Mr. Weed, and the two had not met for seventy-three years, having been boys together at Catskill. Mr. Weed's sight is failing, but his memory has not suffered the slightest impairment. To a reporter who inquired regarding his habits of life, Mr. Weed said: "When I was a printer, in my earlier days, I was an abstainer from all beverages supposed to be intoxicating, even from beer. This was not because I regarded total abstinence as a virtue, but because I had no taste for drink. I used to see my fellow-workmen take their beer and I never thought it my business to find fault with them because they liked it and I didn't. In later years I became an inveterate smoker, and the caricatures of me always represented me with a big cigar in my mouth. I never used tobacco in any other form. About twelve years ago I had a spell of sickness, and when I was getting well my physician advised me to leave off smoking. I have not smoked since. In fact, I have felt no desire for tobacco since. For a number of years I have taken a little wine with my dinner."

Deprive a drunkard of his dram for three days and meanwhile give him plenty of Rock Spring Water, and he won't want the whisky. Don't you think it's worth trying it? If you do drop a postal to Ellis & Co. It will cost only a cent.

Poverty and Distress.

That poverty which produces the greatest distress is not of the purse but of the blood. Deprived of its richness it becomes scant and watery, a condition termed anemia in medical writings. Given this condition, and scrofulous swellings and sores, general and nervous debility, loss of flesh and appetite, weak lungs, throat disease, spitting of blood and consumption, are among the common results. If you are suffering from thin, poor blood employ Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which enriches the blood and cures these grave affections. Is more nutritive than cod liver oil, and is harmless in any condition of the system, yet powerful to cure. By druggists.

A Surprised Locomotive

—AND—

A Swearing Engineer

The people along the line of railway from Tramway Landing La., to the inland towns were surprised and amused at a recent occurrence. So many strange things, however, are constantly presenting themselves to the attention of the people now-a-days that genuine surprises are few indeed. This was the exception. We have read of the "painted ship on a painted ocean" and witnessed the "poetry of motion" as shown in dancing but had never heard of decorations in rapid flight on a railway train until this time. People observed, with wide-eyed wonder, the locomotive and tender and full train of cars moving through the country, adorned on every available spot with the magical words—"St. Jacobs Oil!" It looked gorgeous, if full display of color is allowed to mean anything these times. It looked sublime, if the impudence of the advertising man be the measuring standard. It looked funny to see the train and engine swathed with these parti-colored rheumatic wrappings; and at a convenient opportunity, a correspondent inquired of the conductor what it all meant.

"Why, it means that my whole train looks like a traveling menagerie," said the conductor. "I laid up my train at Tramway, as usual, and during the hours of 'balmy sleep,' I suppose some of those advertising wretches backed up their 'kit' and posted it from front to rear. I don't know why they did it; but there stands the elongated, red and yellow facts staring you in the face, and just as prominent as a rabbit's ears! It's hard luck stranger, but I guess it's all right."—Galveston (Tex.) Daily Journal.

Endorsed and recommended by the medical profession, for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, and Convalescence from Fevers, &c.

GENTLEMEN: I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit. J. P. WATSON, Pastor Christian Church, Troy, O.

The Iron Tonic is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark, and Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. It serves every purpose where a Tonic is necessary.

WHY may a tipsy man fall into the river with impunity? Because he won't drown as long as his head swims.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR was once a schoolmaster. Some of the officeholders are anxious to know whether they are to be "kept in."

"RICHES have wings," and they need them to keep up with the man who has started a daily paper to fill a long-felt want. And without their wings he generally gets clear out of sight of them.

A NEWLY-MARRIED couple, riding in a carriage, were overturned, whereupon a standerby said it was "A shocking sight." "Yes," said the gentleman, "to see those just wedded fall out so soon."

A HUSBAND advertises thus: "My wife Maria, has strayed or been stolen. Whoever returns her will get his head broke. As to trusting her, anybody can do so if they see fit; for, as I never pay my own debts, it's not likely I'll pay her'n."

DICKY had been silent during his Thanksgiving dinner, but finally he rested his fat elbows on the table, with knife and fork upright in either hand, and gave a great sigh and said, "I wish turkeys could be made double-breasted."

"AH," said an Englishman the other day, "I belong to a country upon which the sun never sets." "And I," said a Yankee, "belong to a country of which there can be no correct map—it grows so fast that surveyors can't keep up with it."

X., WITH his wife and a friend, is seated on the beach, when a passing gentleman bows to the friend. "That is Monsieur R.," he says, "the eminent divorce lawyer, who has never lost a case." "Ah!" cried X. and his wife in the same breath, "present us!"

TWO YEARS hence an entirely new system of railroads from ocean to ocean will be in operation, and already the better part of the great chain is completed. The termini will be New York and San Francisco. The roads forming the routes will be the New York, West Shore and Buffalo, the New York, Buffalo and Chicago, the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, the Northern Pacific and the Oregon Navigation Company's lines. The system will be in direct opposition to the Vanderbilt lines and Union Pacific railroad, and it is claimed for it that it will run through the part of the country that supplies the greatest amount of travel and freight business. The Eastern line will be the New York, West Shore and Buffalo railway, extending from New York to Buffalo. The West Shore, as it is called, will be a powerful rival of the New York Central and Hudson River railroad. The length of the road will be 425 miles—some sixteen miles shorter than the Central. The road is to be straighter than the Central, and the projectors assert that the running time will be decreased at least one hour between New York and Buffalo. The West Shore is under contract to Syracuse, and the work of construction is being vigorously prosecuted on all sections. Just as soon as the surveys can be made west of Syracuse work will be begun. Trains will be running from New York to Albany on the west shore of the Hudson river next summer, and by the middle of 1882 the entire line will be in operation. The road will be double-tracked from one end to the other. Steel rails will be laid and the bridges will be of iron.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD, when he for the last time entered the Washington railway station, carried a small hand-trunk which he had packed himself. His widow preserves it as he left it, and will not allow it to be unpacked.

Do'st thou love life? Then do not squander valuable time, for that is the stuff life is made of; but procure at once a bottle of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup for your cough and be cured. Your druggist keeps it.

PETER PARLEY'S GRAVE.

The parents of our young readers remember "Peter Parley's Magazine," "Robert Merry's Museum" that succeeded it, which was finally absorbed in the Youth's Companion. The genial old author of these once-popular publications, once the delight of thousands of children, now sleeps without a monument—save in the good name and the loved and useful record he left to the world.

His grave lies almost unmarked on the Connecticut hillside. Once, while he was traveling in the West, a wealthy lady, at a festival in St. Louis given in his honor, complimented him as a benefactor of his race, and promised to erect a monument to his memory. That memorial has never been built. The good man's monument is in the loving hearts that, forty years ago, were his delighted readers and pupils.

It is well to remind the young of the present day where his ashes rest. At a very short distance from the "Goodrich Place," at Southberry, Ct., is a rural graveyard. Here and there, scattered in among the long grass, are mounds, where lie buried the forgotten dead. Now and then some modern shaft tells of those lately mourned, and once in a while some fine monument attracts the visitor's eye.

Within this inclosure is a small plot, fenced in with stern simplicity. Two costly but plain slabs of marble stand within. On one is a name and two dates, and the emblem is an open book with two or three dog-eared leaves. There lies "Peter Parley," world-known and world-loved; how few can tell where are shrined his mortal remains! Yet this was his choice. With the modesty of great minds, he shrunk from praise or publicity, and unsung, though not unhonored, he lies in a country graveyard.—Philadelphia Saturday Night.

Its Equal is Unknown.

A Lowell (Mass.) paper, so we observe, cites the case of Mr. P. H. Short, proprietor of the Belmont Hotel, that city, who suffered with rheumatism for seventeen years without finding relief from any of the numerous remedies employed, until he applied St. Jacobs Oil: "I never found any medicine that produced such remarkable and instantaneous effect as it did," says Mr. Short.—Lyons (Ia.) Mirror.

A WIFE WHO IS TOO GOOD FOR ANYTHING.

"My wife," says Tom Arter, "is just too good for this earth—that's all there is about it. There isn't an angel in the suburbs of Heaven that can hold a candle to her in pure and cussed unadulterated goodness. Whatever she does or says is right, dead, unqualifiedly and emphatically right. Unborn babies and people who have lived long in their graves may do wrong, but Mrs. Arter never does. She is simply immaculate and most infernally infallible.

"She never told a lie—that is, she says she never did, and I value the remnant of hair on my head too valuable to dispute her. She can go walloping around among the neighbors, and gabble gossip and swap scandals and break commandments, and it's all right. She can wallop young Tom until he has to stand up for his breakfast for weeks at a clip, and it's all right. She can open a can of oysters with my razor and give away my best pants for a peck of peaches, and it's all right.

"But just let me commit an indiscretion no bigger than a pinhead, and I am the almightiest villain that ever breathed. Just let me go home feeling like I had been the butt end of a piledriver all day, and remark that I'm tired, I'm the most unmitigated liar on the globe. Just let me spank Tom the least bit, and I'm the ungainliest brute unhung. Let me spend 5 cents for a glass of beer to cool my parched lips, and I'm a scoundrel whom it would be base flattery to call Guiteau.

"Fact is, she's too good, and I'm too mean. Young Tom is just middling, I reckon, and may grow up worth something. If he does it will be a miracle. One parent with shining, silver wings about to soar for Heaven every minute, and the other on the brink of Hades ready to drop, it is hard to say what the boy will come to, and he so young, too! Well, there's a point somewhere when a woman can get too good. She's nearing that line on the lightning express."

A Boy's Luck.

The Norristown (Pa.) Herald in a recent issue referred among others, to the following cases of special interest. They are their own commentary. Mr. Samuel C. Nyce resides at 308 Marshall street, and holds the responsible position of journal clerk in the Pennsylvania Legislature, at Harrisburg. While Mr. Nyce and family were in the country recently, his boy, aged three years, fell and broke his leg. He recovered, but a very troublesome stiffness set in and he could scarcely use the leg. The injured limb was rubbed several times with St. Jacobs Oil, and the stiffness was so much reduced that the boy was able to use his leg freely. Dr. Knipe said it was the use of St. Jacobs Oil that cured the stiffness. Mr. Nyce himself used the Great German Remedy for toothache with good effect, and also for a sprain and pains of rheumatic nature, and always with good effect. Mrs. Nyce also says she thinks the Oil is a splendid thing, and she always keeps it on hand.

Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

THURLOW WEED lately passed his 84th birthday, and the veteran politician spent the greater part of it receiving the numerous friends who called to offer him the congratulations to which the occasion gave rise. The first to appear was Mr. Hill, a retired merchant living at Weymouth, Mass. He is only four years the junior of Mr. Weed, and the two had not met for seventy-three years, having been boys together at Catskill. Mr. Weed's sight is failing, but his memory has not suffered the slightest impairment. To a reporter who inquired regarding his habits of life, Mr. Weed said: "When I was a printer, in my earlier days, I was an abstainer from all beverages supposed to be intoxicating, even from beer. This was not because I regarded total abstinence as a virtue, but because I had no taste for drink. I used to see my fellow-workmen take their beer and I never thought it my business to find fault with them because they liked it and I didn't. In later years I became an inveterate smoker, and the caricatures of me always represented me with a big cigar in my mouth. I never used tobacco in any other form. About twelve years ago I had a spell of sickness, and when I was getting well my physician advised me to leave off smoking. I have not smoked since. In fact, I have felt no desire for tobacco since. For a number of years I have taken a little wine with my dinner."

Deprive a drunkard of his dram for three days and meanwhile give him plenty of Rock Spring Water, and he won't want the whisky. Don't you think it's worth trying it? If you do drop a postal to Ellis & Co. It will cost only a cent.

Poverty and Distress.

That poverty which produces the greatest distress is not of the purse but of the blood. Deprived of its richness it becomes scant and watery, a condition termed anemia in medical writings. Given this condition, and scrofulous swellings and sores, general and nervous debility, loss of flesh and appetite, weak lungs, throat disease, spitting of blood and consumption, are among the common results. If you are suffering from thin, poor blood employ Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which enriches the blood and cures these grave affections. Is more nutritive than cod liver oil, and is harmless in any condition of the system, yet powerful to cure. By druggists.

A Surprised Locomotive
—AND—
A Swearing Engineer

The people along the line of railway from Tramway Landing La., to the inland towns were surprised and amused at a recent occurrence. So many strange things, however, are constantly presenting themselves to the attention of the people now-a-days that genuine surprises are few indeed. This was the exception. We have read of the "painted ship on a painted ocean," and witnessed the "poetry of motion," as shown in dancing but had never heard of decorative art in rapid flight on a railway train until this time. People observed, with wide-eyed wonder, the locomotive and tender and full train of cars moving through the country, adorned on every available spot with the magical words—"ST. JACOBS OIL!" It looked gorgeous, if full display of color is allowed to mean anything these times. It looked sublime, if the impudence of the advertising man be the measuring standard. It looked funny to see the train and engine swathed with these parti-colored rheumatic wrappings; and at a convenient opportunity our correspondent inquired of the conductor what it all meant.

"Why, it means that my whole train looks like a traveling menagerie," said the conductor. "I laid up my train at Tramway, as usual, and during the hours of 'balmy sleep,' I suppose some of those advertising wretches backed up their 'kit' and posted it from front to rear. I don't know why they did it: but there stands the elongated, red and yellow facts staring you in the face, and just as prominent as a rabbit's ears! It's hard luck stranger, but I guess it's all right."—Galveston (Tex.) Daily Journal.

Dr. HARTER'S Endorsed and recommended by the medical profession, for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, and Convalescence from Fevers, &c.

GENTLEMEN: I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the work I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit. J. P. WATSON, Pastor Christian Church, Troy, O.

THROUGH THE CLOVER.

The air was glad with a sweet perfume
In the stilly, twilight shadow;
And the nodding clover was all abloom,
And the blue grass swayed like a waving plume,
In the heart of the fragrant meadow.

And my soul was glad with a wordless song,
That I whispered over and over;
And the night grew dim and the shadows long,
And my heart leaped high with its passion strong,
As my feet strayed the blooms among
To meet my own true lover.

And the moments sped, and the stars looked down
From the deep blue sky above me;
And the earth was bright with ne'er a frown,
For my fancy wove for my life a crown,
With a brave, true heart to love me.

And my love came through the stilly night—
Came down through the dew-wet clover;
And my heart stood still with a strange affright,
And my soul grew warm and glad and bright,
For I met him there in the dim starlight,
M[illegible], naughty lover.

Perhaps 'twas wrong, but I could not pass
Through the nodding, dew-wet clover;
And the path ran narrow among the grass,
And I was only a foolish lass,
And he a persistent lover.
Perhaps 'twas wrong, but I could not move,
As he whispered o'er and over;
A tale that was sweet with the tones of love,
In a voice that was sweet as a cooing dove;
And my face grew hot, but I could not move
From the arms of my saucy lover.

Perhaps 'twas wrong, but the clover smiled,
And the blue grass nodded over;
And the stars peeped out with a glimmer mild,
And I was a thoughtless, foolish child,
And he such a handsome lover.
Perhaps 'twas wrong, but I could not know,
As I met him there in the clover,
That my heart would swell and my cheeks glow,
And the telltale blood would ebb and flow;
Perhaps 'twas wrong, but I loved him so—
This reckless, brave young lover.

Long years have passed, and the wintry snow
Lies deep o'er the nodding clover;
And the stream of time in its onward flow,
Has closed with the thoughts of long ago
That night with my handsome lover.
But the waves are crooning soft and low
That story o'er and over.
For my love was true, and I loved him so,
In the nodding bloom and the shrouding snow;
And I'm resting still in the afterglow
In the arms of my own true lover.

DORA'S IGNORAMUS.

It was a lovely June morning in the country; the air redolent with the scent of myriad blossoms and musical with the songs of as many wild birds, when Dora Glade stepped over the threshold of her rustic school-house to encounter a surprise not altogether pleasant.

Since the 1st of May Miss Glade had been teaching this school of, perhaps, two dozen urchins, whose ages ranged all the way from 5 to 14 years.

On this particular morning, however, there sat within the school-room, patiently waiting for the arrival of the teacher, a tall, well-built young man who was certainly several years her senior, and whose appearance indicated that he had come to stay.

The teacher herself was just 19, slender and graceful as a willow, with a charming admixture of womanly dignity and girlish shyness in her manner. She did not always know exactly what to do even with some of the rough youngsters already in her charge, and now her fair face darkened with a look of undisguised dismay, as she stopped short in the doorway, regarding this new specimen with a private conviction in her soul that she should never prove equal to the task of managing him.

She looked upon his intrusion into her little fold much as some peaceful shepherd might at the sudden appearance of a mountain lion among his innocent flock. Mastering her chagrin as best she could, Dora called her school together, and soon after approached her unwelcome visitor with a very evident air of embarrassment.

"Do—do you intend to remain in the school, sir?"

For the life of her she didn't know how she ought to address him.

"Yes'm," answered the new-comer, with a meekness which, contrasted with his fine, powerful physique, made her strongly inclined to laugh in his face.

"I calk'late to come afternoons. Can't come much mornin's, bein' as I hev to help Uncle Jake with the crops."

"Oh!" said Dora, gently suppressing a smile, "your name, please?"

"Larry Farnsworth. Squire Jake Farnsworth, over yonder," with an awkward nod of his handsome head in the direction of the squire's mansion, "where I'm a stayin', is my uncle."

"Yes," said Miss Glade, with polite interest. "And now please tell me what you wish to study, Mr. Farnsworth."

"S'pose ye call me Larry, Miss," said this great, fine-looking fellow, with the bashfulness of a child; "I ain't much used to bein' mistered, an' anyhow I reckon I'm one of yer scholars, jist like the rest."

"Certainly," said Dora, somewhat relieved, and determined to put a bold face upon the matter at once. "And now, Larry," with a rosy blush, in spite of herself, "let us proceed to select your studies."

But the verdant young gentleman soon disclosed the fact that what he did know of books might be comprised within a very small space, indeed, while a modest list of what he didn't know would form a record as voluminous as the Whittaker testimony.

Days passed on, and Miss Glade found them passing very pleasantly. Her new pupil, although extremely ignorant, evidently did his best to improve, and was otherwise a perfect model of good behavior. The younger boys, also, gave a great deal less trouble than at first. Whether he issued private orders to them outside, or whether it was a threatening glance from those commanding bright-gray eyes whenever an incipient rebellion arose against the teacher, certain it was that the troublesome urchins behaved much better than before the advent of the "big scholar."

As for Miss Glade's opinion of our hero at the end of a month perhaps we could not ascertain it more easily than by glancing at this portion of a letter written by her to her bosom friend in the city:

"You have not forgotten my ignoramus, of whom I wrote you, Kittie? Well, we still have the honor of his attendance at the school, and I will frankly admit that I should hardly know, now, how to keep the same school without him. How or why he does it I do not pretend to know, but he seems to have those old-time 'intractables' under such a spell that I do not believe one of them would dare disobey me, if he felt so inclined.

"One other fact is unquestionable to my mind. Were he only blessed with the cultivation and gentlemanly, social polish which Mr. Arthur Hughes possesses, Larry Farnsworth would be my very beau ideal of a man. Often, as he sits poring hopelessly over the multiplication-table, in his homespun suit, sans coat, I catch myself watching the splendid figure, the clear-cut, intellectual face, with its broad, sweeping brow and fascinating gray eyes, almost expecting to hear their owner charm my senses with the eloquence of a Cicero, or thrill my soul with poetic disquisitions on the wonders and beauties of the old masters. He looks as though nature had formed him for a leading spirit among the choicest favorites of literature and art. Silent, those handsome lips seem the very home of poetry and eloquence; but the moment he opens them to speak—shades of Murray! how my fairy castles tumble to the ground! He is an ignoramus, Kittie—a hopeless ignoramus—calling me to his side twenty times a day to unravel problems which ought not to puzzle the intellect of a child often. Worse than all, he does not realize what he has missed. Oh, what a blunderer was destiny, thus to deny this man the one gift that would have made him irresistible!"

And then the postscript:

"I have at last fully decided not to accept the hand of Mr. Hughes. May he find better appreciation elsewhere. With all his elegance and culture he is not the man who can fill the heart of

"DORA GLADE."

And these words of Ettie's letter, in reply:

"Look out, my dear, or the Ignoramus may capture the heart that a man of intellect has failed to win. Stranger things have happened. Many a man has been educated by his wife."

Dora's lips curled, and a flash of annoyance crossed her fair, expressive features as she read.

"Bah!" she exclaimed contemptuously, crumpling the letter in her hand and tossing it into her desk.

But why did her fair face soften into infinite tenderness again, and a blush, deeper than a crimson rose, bathe her cheek and brow and snowy throat as she remembered certain thrilling glances from a pair of bright gray eyes? And why did this worshiper of intellect murmur to herself with a kind of fierce delight?

"He loves me! I know it! I know it!"

During the summer days that followed, her thoughts often turned to Kittie's letter and the tempting possibilities it suggested. But she quickly put them from her. It was exquisitely sweet, this city girl who was well used to refined and cultivated society could not deny to herself, to note the electric influence of her power in the dark flush rising to a manly cheek, the quick thrill of his powerful frame at her lightes, touch, and the passionate light she sometimes caught in the finest eyes she had ever seen. And perhaps her own heart responded to every sign. But it could go no further.

Dora's mind was one of those which ever unconsciously reach out toward all the richest treasures in the world of art and learning, and she knew that it could never be satisfied with the companionship of one who could not, at least, keep pace with her in all the finest charms of intellectual life. She resolved never to make such a dangerous experiment, even for "love's sweet sake." And we think that she was right.

It was the last evening of her stay. Her pupils had all received their little tokens of remembrance, had said good-by to their pretty, girlish teacher, and were now gone to their several homes, leaving her alone to gather up her few effects and indulge in a parting reverie upon the events of the past three months. Larry Farnsworth alone had been absent that last day; but in her secret heart she thanked him for it, for there had been something in his manner of late, and a strange disturbance in her own feelings also, which made her doubt whether her dignified firmness could have stood the trial of a final parting.

How strongly her heart was beating now, as she thought over the past evening when the splendid-looking Ignoramus had walked beside her down the long lane leading from the school-house, and the low-spoken "good-night" of each, as she turned to cross the narrow field in the direction of her lodgings. She remembered, with a thrill of wondering pleasure, how his awkwardness had almost entirely vanished in the unconscious devotion which he paid her.

No, she reflected, with a deep sigh, as she turned to go, it would never do for them to meet again. She must go back to the city and forget. Forget the lowly youth who had power to stir the very depths of her soul as no other mortal man had ever done! Yet her heart bitterly rebelled against the fate which made such renunciation necessary.

Glancing through the open door, she saw a stranger coming up the path—a tall and handsome man, well-dressed and elegant. There was a something strangely familiar to her in his looks, and yet—it could not be!

Ah, but it could! for the next moment her hands were clasped in those of the tall stranger, and her unbelieving eyes were gazing up into the handsome, saucy face of Larry Farnsworth.

"I came to bid my little teacher good-by," he said, looking down upon her mischievously, a sly smile quivering under the slight dark mustache.

"Larry —— !"

It was all she could say, for, unable to bear a certain new expression in the glance of those gray eyes, and the rush of memories it brought her, she sank upon the nearest bench and covered her face with her hands. Larry sat down, too, with a warm light of tenderness in his resolute, saucy face, but the first words that Dora faltered forth made him laugh outright.

"Then you are not the Ignoramus after all?" Still with her face hidden from the roguish eyes.

"Well, no, not exactly, since I have had the honor of graduating from old Harvard," replied the Ignoramus, with exasperating coolness. "But, Miss Glade—Dora," drawing her hands away from the blushing face, "please forgive my naughty masquerade! Hearing much of the pretty schoolma'am from my uncle whom I was visiting, I began it through a pure love of fun, but soon found it so dangerously fascinating that I could not give it up. It was so pleasant to have you lean over my shoulder to correct those dreadful examples, which you couldn't have done, you know, if I had not been your pupil."

"And you might have been teaching me all this time! For shame, sir!" pouted Dora, thinking with burning cheeks of her patient endeavors to educate this Harvard graduate.

"I dare to hope that I have taught you something, Dora—a lesson that is not found in school books. And now, since you have taught your stupid Ignoramus to love you, tell me frankly if you will marry him!"

"I would not, if I could have escaped seeing him again," said Dora wickedly.

"But since you could not?"

Dora turns an arch face, wet with happy tears, to meet Lawrence Farnsworth's thrilling kiss. And thus we leave them to a future, bright and peaceful as the lovely scene outside the rustic school house where Dora Glade first met and loved her Ignoramus.

DOGS AS SENTRIES.

A curious experiment is being tried in several corps of the Russian army. This consists in the introducing of dogs instead of men as sentries. For this duty the wolf dog of the Ural mountains is found most suitable, as this dog will growl at the presence of an intruder instead of barking outright, and thus inciting all the dogs in camp to do likewise.

IS INSANITY INCREASING?

It is a common saying that an increase in the number of insane persons is one of the necessary results of the intensity of modern life. There is certainly a steady increase in the number of inmates in asylums for the insane, an increase greater than the growth of population would seem to warrant. For this there may be several causes:

1. An actual increase in the proportion of persons of unsound mind in comparison with the entire population.

2. A more general and systematic commitment of insane persons to asylums for protection and medical treatment.

3. A steady accumulation of insane persons owing to the better care of the insane and the consequent lowering of the death rate of such persons.

That the second and third causes are real and potent is amply sustained by the statistics of our public institutions. The proportion of insane persons at large naturally diminishes with the improvement and multiplication of asylums and the growing popular conviction that neither individual nor public well being is furthered by allowing the insane to go free, uncared for and without medical assistance; and, as a natural result, the number of the insane in asylums increases proportionally.

Accordingly we may have an increase in the number of annual commitments to asylums, as well as in the number of permanent occupants, without an increase in the total percentage of insanity in the country.

Increased efficiency in the medical treatment of the insane may also seem to increase the number of cases as well as the actual number under care at any time. With unskillful treatment many cases of acute mania may result in speedy death or, what is worse, chronic insanity. In such cases the patient counts but once. With better treatment the patient is ultimately, often speedily, discharged, apparently or really well. The disease is liable to recur, however, and in the course of years the same patient may have to be under treatment several times, each time adding one to the statistics of insanity.

Another fact which tells against the theory that "high-pressure" living tends to unhinge the mind may be found in the source of the larger portion of the inmates of insane asylums. The records of asylums show that most of the insane come, not from the busy professional, mercantile and manufacturing classes, but from those whose lives are a monotonous round of petty drudgery, or, what is equally killing, petty inaction, unfruitful idleness and dissipation. Frivolity probably leads more men and women to the insane asylum than the hardest and intensest pursuit of mental or material wealth.—Scientific American.

A SNEEZING SCENE.

Probably one of the meanest stage tricks that was ever played was played on Mary Anderson. It will be remembered that, in the play of "Ingomar," Parthenia and the barbarian have several love scenes, where they lop on each other and hug some—that is, not too much hugging, but just hugging enough. Ingomar wears a huge fur garment, made of lion's skin, or something. One day he noticed that the moths were getting into it, and he told his servant to see about the moths and drive them out. The servant got some insect powder and blew the hair of the garment full of it, and scrubbed the inside of it with benzine. Ingomar put it on just before he went on the stage, and thought it didn't smell just right, but he had no time to inquire into it. He had not got fairly into his position before Parthenia came out on a hop, skip and jump, and threw herself all over him. She got one lung full of insect powder and the other full of benzine, and as she said, "Wilt always love me, Ingomar?" she dropped her head over his shoulder and said in an aside "For the love of heaven, what have you been drinking?" and then she sneezed a couple of times. Ingomar held her up the best he could, considering that his nose was full of insect powder, and he answered, "I wilt," and then he said to her quietly, "Dam-fino what it is that smells so." They went on with the play between sneezes, and when the curtain went down she told Ingomar to go out and shake himself, and he did. It was noticed in the next act that Ingomar had a linen ulster on, and Mary snoze no more.—New York Mercury.

MAKING TEETH.

The manufacture of teeth is a large industry. There are now twelve manufactories of artificial teeth, that produce every year 10,000,000 teeth, or one to every five persons in the United States. Half this number is made by one firm, founded in 1844. The total sales of teeth amount to $1,000,000 annually. The materials used are feldspar, kaolin and rock crystal. The coloring is platinum, titanium and gold. The feldspar and crystal are subjected to red heat and thrown into cold water. They are then ground in water until fine enough to float. Combined with the coloring, they are subjected to intense furnace heat in molds of brass, which are in two pieces, each molding one-half of the tooth.

The process is delicate and has many interesting details. In the earlier history of the art dentists carved the teeth which their customers demanded, and apprentices were often made useful in that way. The amount of gold used annually in filling teeth is $500,000. Lead was used from 1778 to 1833. There are dentists in New York who give, or say they give, diamond fillings, and in Paris they advertise to use diamond pivots and emerald plugs. The filling of teeth is aided greatly by labor-saving machinery and cunningly-wrought tools. This country makes dental instruments for the world where dentistry is known. An ordinary outfit of instruments costs $500.—Providence Journal.

A NEW DISINFECTANT.

The new disinfectant which has come into such considerable use in England, on account of its proved efficacy, is prepared as follows: Russian turpentine and water are placed in huge earthenware jars, surrounded by hot water; air is driven through the mixture in the jars continually for 300 hours, the result of this being a decomposition of the turpentine and the formation of a peculiar watery solution. After evaporation, the substance is placed in tin cans; it is described as being a light brown powder, of a very pleasant taste and odor, is not poisonous nor damaging in any respect, and is capable in a very remarkable degree of preventing or arresting putrefactive changes.

A NEW method of mutilating silver currency is being employed by numbers of patent-medicine venders and others to advertise their goods and wares. Of late large numbers of coins have been received by the treasury in Washington which are stamped on one side with advertisements. The stamps used are some sort of a die which cuts letters and words into the coin. In most instances the name of the owner of the article advertised is not cut in the coin, but the advertisement simply recommends a certain nostrum or article. As the coin is stamped only on one side it can be passed very readily, exposing only the perfect side. This is a mutilation of currency and a violation of law. The secret service has been directed to investigate this and hunt out and prosecute the offenders.

A GIRL, aged 15 years, was sitting in her house, near Memphis, the other day, when a tramp approaching insisted, in spite of her remonstrance, upon entering. "You better not," she said, "or you will get what you do not want." She laid down her knitting and took her six-shooter from her work-basket. The tramp entered—so did the ball just below his shoulder. A neighbor, rushing in and seeing her quietly knitting with the pistol reposing in the work-basket, asked if she shot him. "Yes," she answered, "and if he kept on coming, I would be shooting until now." The girl is pronounced by a Memphis paper "to be worth her weight in gold dollars," but whether this is a valuation of her estate, or of herself as a protection against tramps is not stated with exactness.

LEARN TO BE BRIEF.

Long visits, long stories, long exhortations and long prayers seldom profit those who have to do with them. Life is short. Time is short. Moments are precious. Learn to condense, abridge and intensify. We can endure many an ache and ill if it is soon over, while even pleasures grow insipid, and pain intolerable, if they are protracted beyond the limits of reason and convenience. Learn to be brief. Lop off branches; stick to the main fact in your case. If you pray, ask for what you would receive and get through; if you speak, tell your message and then hold your tongue; boil down two words into one, and three into two Learn to be brief.—Ithaca Express.

"EMPTY is the cradle, baby's gone, Smith has it," was the way an unobserving New Haven music dealer's advertisement read.

ROSA MCWHORTLEBERRY heard her master remark at the dinner table the other day that Kismet meant "fate," and this is the reason why she so astonished her mistress by remarking the next day to Belinda, the chambermaid, "Oh, Blindy, I can scarcely walk wid the big chilblains all over my two Kismets."

MISS HATTIE SCHELL, of La Crosse, went to Europe to pursue her musical studies, and while abroad experienced a wonderful change of name. She comes back as Signorina Terrina Brambilla. A FEW days ago two young danseuses made their debuts in one of the theaters at Marseilles, in the ballet of the opera of "The Jewess." When the curtain went down the stage manager presented himself before the audience and called for their opinion as to the ability of the new-comers. A volley of groans and hisses was the only reply he received. The engagement of the young ladies was immediately canceled. This custom of asking the public their opinion should be introduced in America. We would then probably have fewer bad actors upon our stage.

The Jury retired at the conclusion of Judge Porter's speech, Wednesday at 4:40 p. m., they were out one hour and sixteen minutes, and returned a verdict of "guilty as charged in the indictment."

Guiteau received an offer of $25 the other day for Corkhill's body. This moves the Philadelphia Times to say: "If the King among the sons of darkness needs a new court jester, Guiteau might fill the bill; but outdoing Guiteau in grim humor there appears another candidate, who wrote to the assassin yesterday, offering him $25 for Corkhill's body. Satan might supply himself with clowns enough to last till doomsday from the strange gathering in the Washington court room, and perhaps he may."

A SENSATION IN SELMA.

A party of negroes travelling on emigrant tickets, issued from Atlanta, Georgia to Jackson, Mississippi, arrived in the city yesterday, on the train from Montgomery. On reaching the Broad Street depot where they were to await the departure of the train for Meridian, some of the depot hands noticed that several of the men in the party were ill, and that their faces were badly broken out. Being suspicious as to the cause of their illness the entire crowd was placed in a small waiting room until Dr. C. J. Clark. President of the Board of Health, who was immediately sent for, should arrive. Dr. Clark, after a careful examination, pronounced three of the party sick with measles, and one with a severe case of varioloid. The result of the doctor's examination being known the Alabama Central Railroad Company positively refused to transport the diseased people, who, in consequence, were promptly taken charge of by the city authorities and Board of Health. The patient with varioloid was taken to the pest house last night and the others were kept at the depot, which was guarded by policemen, who were instructed to keep every one away from the building.—Selma Times, 22d.

A PRACTICAL STATEMENT.

The Indianapolis Sentinel makes the following practical showing of the extent to which the people of Indiana are taxed under the name of "protection," in respect to a single article of universal use:

The population of Indiana in 1880 was 1,978,300. For convenience we will say 2,000,000. Still further for convenience we will divide this population into families of seven persons each—say 285,000 families. We will suppose that the annual expenditures for crockery will amount to $5 per family. or an annual expenditure of $1,225,000. The tariff on crockery is forty per cent.; as a consequence, the tax on the amount paid by the people of Indiana each year is $370,000, or $2 per family on the one article of crockery.

Now there are in the United States about twenty-five establishments manufacturing crockery ware. These establishments have invested, say $1,000,000, and employ, we will say, all told, 1,250 persons. To protect their interests the people of Indiana are taxed annually $575,000, or twenty-eight and one-half cents per capita for every man, woman and child in the State. Would it not be well to modify the tariff tax on crockery, so that our people shall be relieved of at least one-half of their crockery tax burden? If the Legislature of Indiana were to pass a law requiring every family in the State to pay $2 each for the benefit of the twenty-five crockery manufacturing establishments in the country, it is safe to say there would be a small rebellion in the State. But that is just what the present tariff law is doing. The present tariff, while it taxes the laboring man's cups and saucers, plates and dishes, forty per cent., taxes Vanderbilt's diamonds ten per cent.

KISSING.

Philadelphia Times.]

An observant and evidently discriminating young reader of the Times writes to say that he has read with lively satisfaction the occasional expositions of kissing in its various moods and tenses that adorn these columns. But he declares that he is still in doubt as to the right time to be kissing. He retails at some length the embarrassments that this uncertainty has brought upon him, and begs the publication of his letter in full, that others who are similarly situated may contribute to the discussion and thus make the matter clear to those who are willing but timid.

His own experience is not without certain and unique interest. He has known the "sweetest girl in the world" ever since he left school. She belongs to a family that considers it a first duty to "live up to the dining-room dado and the blue china" that garnishes the sideboard and table. The mother holds kissing in abomination and is fond of remarking that the intellect "is not fed through the lips;" that a kiss is a purely fleshy perversion of the sweet intimacy of æsthetic love. Under such a frowning providence the young girl he adores displays an aversion to kissing him good night, in welcoming him with his lover's privilege when he comes of an evening to take her to church, the theatre or what not.

This, it will be seen, is rather a trying plight for a young lover for a kiss is the visible sign and token of an inner sentiment which no words can express. The eyes and the tongue do a great deal of appreciable work in love making, but the meeting of the lips is the sign and seal, the chrism, so to speak, which transforms the earthly into the divine. Love without a kiss would be like the harp without the hand, the rainbow without its hue, the brook without its babble, the landscape without its colors, the tea rose—sweetest flower for scent that blows—without its odor, the borealis without its variations, poetry without rhythm spring without sunlight, a garden without foliage or a marriage without love. The young woman whose ideals teach her to recoil from a kiss cheats the lover of the joys of loving and does not deserve the devotion of a manly heart. She may live up to the dining-room dado and the sideboard bric-a-brac, but she will never prove a congenial wife, and our correspondent will save his heart-string many a future wrench by leaving her to her dado and bric-a-brac.

It is stated that an Indiana girl recently sued a man for breach of promise and proved him such a scoundrel that the jury decided that she ought to pay him something for not marrying her.

A Georgia paper says: "The progress of temperance sentiment in Georgia is not fanatical but it is quiet and persistent, slowly making ground and retaining every position once gained."

HOW TO RAISE CHUFAS.

Prepare ground much like you would for corn, plow deeper. Put fertilizer in some weeks previous to planting, which will take place 10th of March. Open with small plow your previously prepared low bed, and after you soak the seed a day or two, drop from twelve to fifteen inches apart, cover lightly if soil is moist. Plow and hoe enough to keep clean, and if seasons are favorable, rest assured you will have the sweetest meat, after your hogs have fed themselves, with no other trouble than to keep them water to drink. May every man, farmer or not, raise chufas enough to fatten his pork. There is economy in the growing of various roots, potatoes, turnips, carrots, &c Everything loves them as well as we do, and will grow and fatten faster and with less trouble than on corn, that is so very scarce in our land.

Health round about pretty good, except Mr. J. Hughes, who has been suffering severely for some time.

We are delighted with your paper. Onward and upward you are marching. So mote it be.

THE FLOOD AT NASHVILLE.

NASHVILLE, TENN., Jan. 23.

The river has reached a point seven inches above the rise of 1847, making 55 feet, 3 inches. A large amount of drift are floating down the river, with now and then small bridges, which spanned streams in upper counties. A large amount of lumber was carried out from here this morning. Sandbags were placed across Woodland street early to-day to prevent the current from setting through northeast Nashville and carrying away lumber and houses. The river rose to such a point as to force a large additional number of families out from their homes. The people are gratified that the river has reached a stand to-night, and hope it will be falling by to-morrow morning. The Tennessee river is rising at Johnsonville, and is within a few feet of the railroad bridge at that point.

Later.—The river commenced to fall slightly at midnight, last night.

At a rough estimate, losses to individuals will aggregate $500,000. The fund for the relief of sufferers from the flood reaches over $8,000.

We had cherished the hope that the terrible scourge with which our friends at Newton have been visited for several months past was about over; vain hope. Troy Enquirer: "The crops of small grain in this section are looking well and promise fine yields. The acreage is probably 50 per cent, in excess of last year and the appearance of the crop indicates a larger proportionate yield. These crops will be of incalculable benefit to our farmers, whose provision crops are short, and will show perceptibly upon the result of farming operations of the year."

Friday morning about 3 o'clock, as section one of freight train No. 16, L. & N., Railroad, was about half a mile above Bangor, it broke in two. A flagman was sent back to section two, but failed to give signal in time to prevent the engine of section two from running into the caboose of section one, upon which Mr. Poole was standing, and from which he was thrown with violence to the ground, receiving an injury of the knee, which, though quite painful, is not very serious, but which will confine him to his room for several weeks. But little damage was done to the train.

FIENDISH.

A diabolical attempt to spread the smallpox through the mail was recently detected at Richmond, Indiana. An undated and unsealed letter postmarked Cincinnati, in which were enclosed two smallpox scabs, were received by a farmer living near the former city. The letter simply contained the words: "I have sent you the small pox; go home and die." The letter was immediately burned, and the only clue to the perpetrator was thus destroyed; but the best detectives have been set to work on the case. It is to be hoped that the fiend or fiends who sent the letter will be caught and punished as they deserve.

ANOTHER MOTHER SHIPTON.

When lawyers fail to take a fee,
And juries never disagree;
When politicians are content,
And landlords don't collect their rent;
When parties smash all the machines,
And Boston folks give up their beans;
When naughty children all die young,
And girls are born without a tongue;
When ladies don't take time to hop,
And office holders never flop;
When preachers cut their sermons short;
And all folks to the church resort;
When bad subsribers have all paid,
And editors have fortunes made;
Such happenings will sure portend,
This world must soon come to an end.

We often hear of a woman marrying a man to reform him; but no one ever tells about a man marrying a woman to reform her. We men are modest, and don't talk about our good deeds much.—Plainfield Bulletin.

GREAT SMOKERS.

The Hollanders are more given to smoking than any Northern people—"dreaming with the eyes open." The boatman of the Treschkrit, the aquatic diligence of Holland, measure distance by smoke; from one place to another, not so many miles, but so many pipes. Entering the house, your host offers you a cigar, often insisting on filling your cigar case on leaving. Some go to sleep with pipe in their mouth, relight it on wakening in the night, and in the morning before getting out of bed. Diderot says: "A Dutchman is living alembic." The cigar is not the companion of indolence, but the stimulant and aid to labor. Smoke is called their second breath, and the cigar the sixth finger of the hand. A Frenchman tells the story of a rich gentleman of Rotterdam, Van Klaes, surnamed Father Greatpipe, being old, fat, and a great smoker. As a merchant in India he had amassed a fortune. On his return he built a palace near Rotterdam, in which he arranged, as in a museum, all the models of pipes from all countries and of every time. This was open to strangers to whom, after his display of smoking erudition, he gave a catalogue of the museum, bound in velvet, with pockets of cigars and tobacco. Mynheer Van Klaes smoked 150 grammes of tobacco per day, and died at 98; from 18 years of age he smoked 4,333 kilogrammes—making an uninterrupted black line of tobacco of twenty French leagues in length. When but a few days left to complete his 98th year, he suddenly felt his end approaching, and sent for his notary, a smoker of great merit, and said: "My good notary, fill my pipe and your own; I am about to die." When both pipes were lighted Van Klaes dictated his will, celebrated over Holland.

After the disposal of the bulk of his property to relatives, friends and hospitals, he dictated the following articles:

"I desire that all smokers in the country shall be invited to my funeral by all possible means, newspapers, private letters, circulars and advertisements. Every smoker who shall accept the invitation shall receive a gift of ten pounds of tobacco and two pipes, upon which shall be engraved my name, my arms, and the date of my death. The poor of the district who shall follow my body to the grave shall receive, each man, every year on the anniversary of my death, a large parcel of tobacco. To all those who shall be present at the funeral ceremonies, I make the condition, if they wish to benefit by my will, that they shall smoke uninterrupted during the ceremony. My body shall be inclosed in a case lined inside with the wood of my old Havana cigar boxes. At the bottom of the case shall be deposited a box of French tobacco, so-called caporal, and a parcel of our own Dutch tobacco. At my side shall be laid my favorite pipe and box of matches, because no one knows what may happen. When the coffin is deposited in the vault, every person present shall pass by and cast upon it the ashes of his pipe."

The will was carried out. The funeral was splendid and veiled in a thick cloud of smoke. The poor blessed the memory of the deceased, and the country still rings with his fame.

SHE WANTED A WARRANT.

"Say, mister, I want a warrant right quick!" exclaimed an irate woman, as she dashed into police headquarters.

"What do you want of a warrant?" asked the sergeant.

"For my servant girl. Has she got any right to chase me around the house with a clothes-pole?"

"Certainly not."

"That's what I thought. Which of us has a right to eat at the first table, she or me?"

"Why, you, of course."

"So I supposed. I want to know if I have got to sleep on the back fence with the cat four nights in a week while she gives parties in the kitchen?"

"Assuredly not. Why don't you discharge her?"

"I can't get near enough. Say, does the law justify her in using my false teeth to draw carpet-tacks, and making me shin around with nothing on but a hair-pin and a sore-throat, while she wears my clothes to a wake?"

"I don't believe it does."

"So I concluded. Gi' me a warrant."

"Can't get any warrant here. You'll have to go before the Judge in the morning."

"Will, eh! Well, I won't! If you think I'm going to waste any more time lawing with that girl you're left. To-morrow morning the oil-can will be left alongside the kitchen stove, and if you find a job lot of legs and backbone around your precinct you can make up your mind that that girl is out of a job, and I'm busy collecting the insurance. You hear this twittering!"

And she left the sergeant wondering if even dynamite would have any effect on a girl who could get the best of that woman.—Brooklyn Eagle.

THE returns for the past year show that, of the great commercial cities of the world, Chicago now ranks as the fourth in importance, only London, New York and Boston taking precedence of her.

THE CHINESE BAMBOO.

A bamboo, be it said, can be put to more uses than any other thing of the vegetable kind in the world. What would our opposite neighbors in the Celestial empire do without it? It is employed for every conceivable, beside some inconceivable purposes, on land and water, and even in the air; for kites are made of it, and so are the queer little whistles bound to the tame pigeons to frighten crows from the grain fields. It can be used in the whole cane, in strips, in segments or in threads, and no part comes amiss. The tubes are suitable for water pipes, and so it answers for aqueducts; it is so strong that foot bridges are constructed of it, and light enough for rafts; so available that a whole house can be built of it—the frame, the thatch, the lattices, the partitions—and it furnishes material for the tables and chairs and some of the utensils and decorative articles; it is so hard that knives are made from thin slices, and so delicate that it may be carved into daintiest of boxes, and even thimbles and necklaces; so elastic that baskets are woven of it, so fibrous that it may be twisted into ropes and cordage. It supplies lining for the chests of tea, strands for fishing nets, strips for fans and canes stiff enough for oars and spears and palanquin poles. It is one of the four things without which China would be China no longer; rice for food, tea for drink, silk for wear and bamboo for everything.

There are said to be more than sixty varieties of this wonderful thing, which is neither grass nor tree, yet is in structure like grass, while it grows in dense groves, like trees, and shoots away up even to a height of 150 feet, and is nothing after all but a hollow, jointed reed.—Wide Awake.

JOHN HAY does not approve Col. Rockwell's translation of the phrase Strangulatus pro Republica, written by Garfield on the 17th of July last, into "slaughtered for the republic." He writes from Cleveland, saying: "The Latin strangulare, in its literal sense, applies exclusively to death by choking or suffocation. It is derived, without change of meaning, from the corresponding Greek verb, which comes in turn from the noun straggala, a halter. So good a Latinist as the President would scarcely have chosen a word of such narrow and inappropriate meaning, when the better word occisus, to describe death by wounding, must have been ready to his hand. But there is a metaphorical meaning of strangulatus which is used in the poets and in writers of post-classical prose, especially writers upon law, which was probably in Gen. Garfield's mind as he lay chained to his bed in that long midsummer agony. The word, in that sense, means 'tortured' or 'tormented.' There is authority for such use of it in Ovid, Seneca and Juvenal. All the evidence we have indicates that on the 17th of July the President's own hope of recovery, as well as that of his attendants, was still strong. May we not, then, reasonably infer that this most impressive and memorable legend means 'Tortured for the Commonwealth?'"

THE practice of "hazing," which has been in vogue among college students for so many years, is one for which there is not the shadow of an excuse, and yet, by the negligence of the college authorities, it has been allowed to grow and flourish. At long intervals a spasm of justice would strike the authorities of some particular institution of learning, and perhaps the most notorious "hazers" in the school would be relegated to the obscurity of private life, but this was of little benefit to the victims of their cruelty, since there were always plenty of young hoodlums left to continue the persecution of the younger scholars. The natural consequence of "hazing" is to create a breed of youthful ruffians and bullies in every college and academy, and their pranks in different schools during the past two years are too fresh in the minds of the public to need mention at this time. Like others, Bowdoin College has its quota of "hazers," and not long since several of them proceeded to exercise their peculiar arts on a youth named Strout, the son of a well-known resident of Portland, Me. They succeeded, by using chunks of coal as missiles, in injuring one of the boy's eyes to such an extent that he will probably lose the sight of it entirely. For this the father of Strout has brought suit for damages against seven of the highly-educated persons who were engaged in the assault on his son, laying the damages in each case at $10,000. It is to be hoped that the courts, now that the matter has been squarely brought before them, will give so emphatic an opinion on the subject of "hazing" that in the future its exponents will be few and far between.

FIFTY years ago the first American cheese crossed the Atlantic. During the year ending Oct. 31, 1881, we sent 127,311 cheeses to our friends over the way, and the London hotels and coffee-houses depend entirely upon the American supply.

PAPER has gone into use in some of the restaurants in Berlin as plates for dry or semi-dry articles of food. There is no reason why cheap paper cups, properly glazed, should not be employed at railroad stations, so that passengers could take a cup of coffee along with them, instead of hastily drinking it at a lunch-counter.

THE Nebraska City (Neb.) Press says: St. Jacobs Oil strikes heavy blows for good all around, and its virtues for rheumatic pains are lauded upon every hand. Try it, all ye who suffer.

A NEW YORK flat of six not very commodious rooms, two of which are dark, rents for $4,200. The cost of the building, with the land, is set at $250,000, and it is rented to twenty-one families, paying aggregate rent to the amount of $92,000. But the building stands on Broadway, the elevator is lined with blue satin, and the elevator boy speaks French and Italian.

Rather Enthusiastic.

The Wilmington (Del.) Daily Republican lately contained the following item of popular interest: Dr. J. F. Speck, who is connected with the Wilmington Every Evening, speaks rather enthusiastically of St. Jacobs Oil. Dr. Speck states that he uses the Oil in his family as a household remedy, a sort of universal panacea for all aches and pains, and has always found it to act most happily. His attention was called to it by the many testimonials in its favor, and he one day used it upon himself for sore throat. Two applications were sufficient to effect a cure. He also used it on his little girl for sore throat with gratifying success. The same child had scarlet fever this winter, which left the tendons of one leg much contracted. The little prattler couldn't walk without assistance and suffered much inconvenience and pain. Several applications of St. Jacobs Oil restored her limb to its normal condition, and she has not experienced any trouble since. Dr. Speck states that he has also seen the Oil act charmingly in toothache. He thinks St. Jacobs Oil is a sterling remedy, and does not hesitate to recommend it for rheumatism, etc.

The Age of Miracles is past, and Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" will not raise the dead, will not cure you if your lungs are almost wasted by consumption. It is, however, unsurpassed both as a pectoral and alterative, and will cure obstinate and severe diseases of the throat and lungs, coughs, and bronchial affections. By virtue of its wonderful alterative properties it cleanses and enriches the blood, cures pimples, blotches, and eruptions, and causes even great eating ulcers to heal.

THE Mayor of Janesville, Wis., ordered a red flag to be hung out from a house where small-pox had been discovered. A crowd of auction buyers trooped to the house, and the banners on the outer walls was hurriedly changed to yellow.

The eminent author, Prof. A. C. Kendrick, D. D., LL. D., who is professor of Hebrew, Latin and Greek in the University of Rochester, and was one of the revisers of the New Testament, in general conversation with a number of gentlemen, a short time since, said: "I have received from the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure very marked benefit and I can most cordially recommend it to others."

"IS YOUR father a Christian?" asked a gentleman of a little boy on one occasion. "Yes, sir," said the little boy, "but I believe he has not worked much at it lately."

Time Testers and Burden Bearers.

From time immemorial the horse has been man's best friend. But a few years back we can all remember the comparatively little attention paid to this most indispensable of animals. We say comparatively little attention, for the horse was as well groomed, and certainly as well fed, as now; and at those great gatherings—agricultural shows—you would see the pride of the county and State stables and farms assembled. But there was a conspicuous want of noble draught horses, and as for speeders—well, 2:40 was the great ultimate limit that owners in those days desired to strive for. But now a 2:40 animal is esteemed a fair roadster, and fine animals only deserve the name when they can shade the first quarter of the third minute. There have been immense strides forward in the right development of horseflesh in the civilized countries of the world, as shown by the time-records of the racers and draught capacity of the humbler, but really more useful, work-horse. Many things have conspired to effect this desirable end, chief among which have been the intelligent care and consideration bestowed upon the animal in his every relation—in a word, upon the breeding. And this has not failed to include a very serious modification of the old methods of treatment, doing away, in many cases, with the inhuman and really savage plans pursued in the eradication of even simple disorders and ailments, and substituting rational measures of relief instead. A prominent factor of this reform, and one indorsed by owners, breeders, farmers and stockmen the country over, is ST. JACOBS OIL, recognized by all who have used it as an exceptionally good remedy for the ailments of the horse and stock generally, meeting more indications for its use and effecting far better results than any article of a curative or remedial nature ever introduced. Such breeders and horsemen as Aristides Welch, Esq., of Erdenheim, near Philadelphia; Mike Goodin, Esq., Belmont Park, Pa.; Calvin M. Priest, formerly in charge of Mr. Robert Bonner's stock, New York; and thousands of others throughout the country, who could be named, are on the list of unqualified endorsers of the efficacy of ST. JACOBS OIL.

VOL I. CLANTON, ALA., THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 2, 1882. NO. 12.

THE YEARS PASS ON.

"When I'm a woman, you'll see what I'll do!
I'll be great and good, and noble and true;
I'll visit the sick and relieve the poor—
No one shall ever be turned from my door;
But I'm only a little girl now."
And so the years pass on.

"When I'm older I'll have more time
To think of heaven and things sublime;
My time is now full of studies and play
But I really mean to begin some day;
I am only a little girl now."
And so the years pass on.

"When I'm a woman," a gay maiden said,
"I'll try to do right, and not be afraid;
I'll be a Christian, and give up the joys
Of the world with all its dazzling toys;
But I'm only a young girl now."
And so the years pass on.

"Ah me!" sighed a woman gray with years,
Her heart full of cares and doubts and fears,
"I kept putting off the time to be good,
Instead of beginning to do as I should;
But I'm an old woman now."
And so the years pass on.

Now is the time to begin to do right;
To-day, whether the days be dark or bright;
Make others happy by good deeds of love,
[illegible] for help from above;
And then you'll be happy now,
And as the years pass on.

THE BLUE SATIN BOOTS.

There was a church fair and festival n hand at Waynesville, and all the oung ladies were in a state of feminine utter.

Pretty brown-eyed Jenny Carson had ne of the fancy tables. She had also a ew dress for the occasion. The soft, luning folds of dark blue silk were raped over the bed, and Jenny was eeling upon the floor, arranging the oops of satin ribbon to her taste, when iss Bell Dorsey, who was Jenny's most ntimate friend, burst into the room:

"Oh, what a pretty dress, Jenny! ou'll look ravishing in it. You only eed a pair of blue satin boots to match t, and then you'll be the best-dressed irl at the festival."

"But—satin boots are very expensive," aid Jenny, hesitatingly.

"Oh, well, yes, somewhat. But here's nothing sets off a lady's appearance like nice shoes and gloves. I heard r. Chester say he never considered a ady well dressed if she wore ill-fitting oots or gloves." And Miss Bell complacently crossed her own pretty French ids, while Jenny nervously put away he pretty silk.

What Dr. Chester said was beginning o be a matter of some moment to Jenny Carson. She was conscious of a longing or the blue boots; but alas! they were oo expensive for her.

Miss Bell presently took her leave, and enny, with half her pleasure spoiled, ent on with her preparations.

"Well, daughter," said her father at the dinner-table, "do you need any fallals for your frolic to-morrow?"

"Yes, I do need some new shoes, and some gloves," said Jenny.

"You do, eh? Well, what must I give you to buy them with?"

"Whatever you can spare, papa."

"Well, here's a $10 bill. I guess that will be enough. Get a good, sensible pair now, something to keep you warm this cold weather, and no flimsy things."

"Yes, sir. Thank you, papa. I'll do the best I can," said Jenny; but she blushed, for in her heart she felt very guilty.

However, she did mean to buy a pair of warm kid boots for everyday wear. She hoped to get the blue ones for about $4, which would leave her enough for the others, and for the gloves.

But when she stood in Turner's store and asked the price of the dainty, shiny things offered her, the clerk promptly answered $7, Miss Carson.

"Oh, dear! I was in hopes they were cheap," frankly confessed Jenny laying down the boots.

"Indeed, they are cheap," said the clerk. "I assure you, Miss Carson, we have sold these right along at $8. This is the last pair, so we offer them for less. They're very fine."

"Yes," admitted Jenny.

"Nothing sets off a dainty foot like a pair of these dainty boots," pursued the wily clerk, with an eye for his trade. "Very few young ladies could wear so small a shoe—just your size, you see, Miss Carson."

Poor Jenny sighed, thought of the thick, warm boots she ought to have, cast a longing look at the blue beauties, recalled what Dr. Chester said, and, silly little puss, for once let her vanity run away with her reason.

"I'll take them," she said. After the boots were paid for, there was barely enough left to buy her gloves and a ribbon or two.

The next day, the great one, was clear and cold, with a sharp wind. Overshoes would ruin the dainty satin boots, but luckily for Jenny, the ground was dry. But it was frozen hard, and when she reached the gayly-decorated room of the new church her feet were like ice.

Jenny presided at one of the fancy tables. She made a lovely picture in the beautiful blue silk; her throat and wrists shaded with the softest lace, and the dainty blue boots fluttering in and out below the plaiting of her skirt.

Bell Dorsey was already at her post, and as Jenny came up she opened her eyes wide and exclaimed: "Oh, my, you blue angel! Did you drop from the clouds?"

Jenny laughed, and, happening just then to catch a glance from Dr. Chester, who stood near, blushed with pleasure, while the gentle heart in her bosom throbbed tumultuously.

Jenny had a very busy day of it. There was much buying and selling, and Jenny's table was very popular. But, as the new church was large and not yet finished, it was not very warm. The girls at the table were chilly all day, and by the time evening came Jenny's feet were so numb and cold that she could hardly stand.

A hot supper, however, had been prepared at the hotel just across the street. Dr. Chester waited on Jenny at the table. Glad enough was she to get something warm and be near a fire.

But Dr. Chester, though kind and polite, was not what he had been. He seemed strangely cold and distant, and Jenny felt as if her bright day was spoiled. But girls know how to hide these things, and Jenny was the gayest of the gay. She had to return to her stall again immediately after supper; and oh! how sharply the cold struck her as she stepped out into the night.

Dr. Chester left her at the door of a small room designed for a vestry, but now used by the ladies as a dressing room. Jenny ran in to put off her wraps, but, while doing this, heard her name spoken in the narrow passage without.

"It's all settled, I suppose, Doctor, between you and Miss Carson," was what she heard.

"No, Fred. I've seen the folly of that, to-day. The tones, which answered, were the well-known ones of Dr. Chester.

"You astonish me!" replied Fred.

"I don't mind giving you the reason, Fred," said the doctor. "Just look at that young lady's feet, and you will have it. In spite of this cold day she wears nothing but a flimsy pair of blue-silk shoes. I have more than fancied Miss Carson; I don't deny it. But you will see at once that a girl who can so utterly sacrifice her reason to her vanity is not the wife for a poor, struggling doctor, with his fortune yet to make. But enough of this. Let's go in. It's chilly here."

Poor Jenny! Fortunately, there was no one in the dressing-room but herself. She flew to the furthest end and hid her burning face on a pile of cloaks. But, after a brief struggle, she rallied. It would never do to cry. It would never do to go to her table with red eyes. It was a very erect, firm-mouthed little lady who walked to her table presently, and the heels of the pretty blue boots came down upon the floor with a sharp, resolute little click; for Miss Jenny had made up her mind to do something very odd.

"I am a little fool," she said to herself, "but I don't quite deserve to lose a good man's good opinion, and I won't either if I can help it."

It was late before she was ready to go home. Just as she was about to start, Dr. Chester, who was her escort, handed her a pair of overshoes, saying, quietly, as if it were a matter of course: "Miss Jenny, please put these on; it is too cold a night for such thin shoes as I see you wear."

Poor Jenny! Her face was scarlet with mortification. She made out to utter a confused "Thank you," and put on the offending overshoes without another word. Then she took the doctor's arm, and they went out together.

Jenny's heart was beating so fast that it almost choked her, but she was as determined as ever. Before ten steps had been taken, she said:

"Dr. Chester, do you think it right to condemn a person for a single fault?"

"Certainly not," said the doctor, promptly.

"Then, why do you condemn me?"

"I don't understand you," said he.

"I heard every word you said to Fred Somers to-night," rejoined Jenny, quietly.

"Miss Jenny!" He stopped, startled.

"I did. I don't blame you, Doctor; I gave you reason to think me only a vain, silly girl. But please hear my defence and how sorry and ashamed I am, won't you?" And then Jenny made her penitent, little confession, ending with, "I don't know what you think of me now; but, indeed—"

"I think you the dearest, bravest little girl in the world, and 'tis I who am the fool," cried the doctor, ardently. And then—but then, I don't know that outsiders like you and I, reader, have any business to listen.

When Jenny got home she took off the blue boots which had so narrowly cost her a lover, and flung them under her wardrobe, saying:

"Lie there, you blue wretches! But you've taught me a good lesson. I've done with you. I'll buy my wedding boots before long, and they'll not be blue ones, either."

A MACHINE THAT WOULDN'T SELL.

A Nevada man invented a lying-machine and went round trying to sell 'em. The machine was warranted to trot out a first-class lie on any subject at a moment's notice. But it didn't sell well. He took it to a horse-trader. Said the trader: "Come, you, get out of this, I tell the truth in my business." The inventor presented it to a lawyer, and he also looked horror-stricken and offended. A fishing party looked hankeringly at it but their language was to the effect that they abhorred untruth. A young man, who was engaged to three different girls, also felt indignant at the offer. At last the disheartened inventor tried an editor. The writer flew mad in a minute. "You scoundrel," he cried, "do you mean to insult me?" "No," tremblingly answered the poor man. "Then what the blazes do you mean by offering me that thing?" "Why, I—I—thought you might occasionally want to use it in your business." "You wretch, what do you take me for?" "Oh, sir, I didn't mean to insinuate that you were a liar! I don't for a minute think, sir, you could tell a lie!" "That's it!" cried the editor, "that's what I'm mad about! You conceited ass, you think you're able to invent a machine that I can't lie all around, and that without an effort. I never was so insulted in my life! Get! ! !" Editors are not hypocrites, anyway.—Boston Post.

THE MIGRATION OF BIRDS.

Ducks are reported to be able to fly 1,500 miles at one time, and the pace of the swallow and martin is put down at 900 miles in twenty-four hours. Linnets and other seed-eating birds have been known to settle on the mast and rigging of ships far away from land out at sea. They will take their night's rest on the rigging, and when leaving the ship know exactly in what direction to continue their flight. It is said that the migration of birds will foretell severe weather, and it is well known by the bird-catchers, when the larks and other northern birds appear, that snow and hard weather will follow the flight. These warnings, of migratory birds, though apparently insignificant, may be of vast political and even national importance. If the Emperor Napoleon, when on the road to Moscow with his army in 1811, had condescended to observe the flights of storks and cranes passing over his fated battalions, subsequent events of the politics of Europe might have been very different. These storks and cranes knew of the coming on of a great and terrible winter; the birds hastened toward the south, Napoleon and his army toward the north.

TABLE MANNERS.

Nothing reflects more upon home training than bad manners at table. Restlessness, shown by fidgeting in your seat, moving the feet unnecessarily, playing with the table utensils or crumbling the bread is very annoying to those who have been trained correctly in youth.

To open the mouth while chewing the food instead of keeping the lips closed; to talk when the mouth is full; to suck up soup from the spoon; to put a knife in the mouth; to bend the head down over the plate; eating rapidly, or to make a noise in eating, are breaches of good manners.

Chew the food well, but quietly, and eat slowly. Never use a spoon for anything but liquids, ice cream, cheese, fish (where silver fish knives are not used.)

Everything that can be eaten without a knife, or a spoon, should be eaten with a fork—such as sweetbread, rissoles, pies, etc. Bread is always broken, when not buttered; not bitten nor cut with a knife.—Youth's Companion.

THE LITTLE MAN IN THE YELLOW COAT.

Two hundred years ago, almost at the very moment when his soldiers were entering Strasbourg, the Roi Soleil started out from Fontainebleau to take possession in person of his new conquest. The day before—that is to say, on the 29th of September, 1681—Louis XIV. had announced to his court, in the presence of the German Ambassador, that he had made up his mind to go to Strasbourg in order to receive the oath of fealty which the treaty of Nimegue gave him the right to exact from the city. It was a coup de theatre and no mistake. But how happened it that the King was so well informed as to the actual condition of affairs at so distant a point? Well, the story runs as follows:

One evening the Minister Louvois sent for a young man who had been recommended to his good graces, and said: "Sir, you will get into a post carriage which you will find at my door. My servants have exact instructions what to do. You will proceed to Bale without stopping, and you will reach there about 2 o'clock to-morrow. You will proceed immediately to the bridge which crosses the Rhine. You will remain there until 4 o'clock. You will carefully notice all that you may see there. You will then again get into the carriage and, without losing a minute, will return and report to me what you may have seen."

The young man bowed and started at once. The day after, at 2 o'clock, he reached Bale and at once hastened to take up his station on the bridge. Nothing extraordinary attracted his attention. It was market-day, and some peasants were passing and repassing, bringing vegetables and taking back their empty carts. A squad of militia passed. Townsfolk crossed the bridge, talking of the news of the day, and a little man, wearing a yellow coat, leaned over the railing and amused himself by dropping stones into the water, as if to create circling eddies, which he watched with a satisfied look. Four o'clock struck, and the Minister's messenger started on his return to Paris. Very late in the evening the young man, greatly disappointed at the result of his mission, arrived at the house of Louvois. The Minister was still awake and rushed to see his protege.

"What did you see?" he asked.

"I saw peasants going and coming; a squad of militia passed over the bridge; citizens who walked along discussing the day's news, and a little man wearing a yellow coat, who was amusing himself by dropping stones into the water."

The Minister had heard enough, and he hurried to the King. The little man in yellow was a secret agent, and the stones dropped into the water was a signal that all difficulties had been overcome, and that Strasbourg belonged to France.

IS DYING PAINFUL?

Our own observation fully accords with the opinion expressed by a physician, that in all ordinary cases there is little physical pain in dying. A previous correspondent had said that, "as a physical fact in ninety-nine case out of 100, the act of death is suffering and agony which only those familiar with it can understand." To which the physician replies:

"I beg leave as a physician to object very decidedly to this statement. Since I began my novitiate on the battle fields of the South, I have been a frequent observer of the passing out of my fellow-beings, in the army and navy, in large hospitals, civil and military, and in private life, and hence cannot help feeling that what I have seen must be a fair sample of the methods of dying peculiar to our race.

"The result of these sad observations, covering eighteen years, is that the vast majority of persons do not find death 'suffering and agony.' Many suffer more from the various illnesses from which they recover than most do in the article of death. A very large proportion become unconscious and hence pass away without distress to themselves; while, as regards those who retain a good measure of intelligence till life is extinct, I have been greatly surprised, considering my early religious teaching, to discern in them almost general indifference to their fate.

"I have always supposed that, in spite of apparent mental lucidity, disease clouds the intellect so that apathy becomes the ordinary state of the dying. Of the few deaths I have witnessed the mere onlookers might call horrible, there was good reason to believe the patient unconscious."—New York Observer.

EFFECT UPON EUROPE OF THE DISCOVERY OF AMERICA.

The voyage of Columbus in 1492 was in many respects the greatest event which had occurred in the world since the birth of Christ. Politically and socially it was the beginning of an entirely new chapter in human history, and it wrought effects upon men's speculative thinking which, though perhaps less conspicuous, were not less real or remarkable. In much more than the mere geographical sense was this the discovery of a new world. It was the first in a complicated series of events which four centuries have not yet fully rounded into a period; the foundation of a new Europe in America, in Africa, in Australia and in the islands of the Pacific; the rise of the English race to political and commercial supremacy, and the advance of the English language toward what may become universal dominion; the reorganization of government upon a higher plane than the middle ages had even been able to foreshadow; the renovation of society in the old Europe through countless subtle influences; the permanent triumph of the industrial over the predatory spirit; the successful assertion of individual freedom against the paralyzing absolutism inherited from the Roman empire; the overthrow of sacerdotalism, and the Christianization of the world. It would probably be too much to assert that some of these desirable results might not have been attained, so far as the old Europe is concerned, even if the lands beyond the sea had never been explored and colonized. It is unquestionable, however, that the progress would have been much slower and much more subject to interruption. The part performed by England, for example, in the work of European civilization since the age of Elizabeth has been so immense and so complicated that no elaborateness of analytic description can do it justice. Yet England in Elizabeth's time was hardly a first-class power, and but for the colonization of America in the seventeenth century it is difficult to see in what way she would so surely or so soon have gained the commercial supremacy which gave her in the eighteenth the dominion of the ocean, and thus secured her the foremost position in the world. To those—and there are many such in America—who are in the habit of regarding American history as a dry and uninteresting study, it may be a profitable matter of reflection that since the beginning of the seventeenth century it is impossible to follow intelligently the affairs of the old Europe through a single generation without constant reference to the New World.—John Fiske, in Harper's Magazine.

AN ARKANSAS JURY.

Down in an extremely rural district of Arkansas an old man was arrested for stealing a hog. The proof was positive, and court was surprised when the plea of not guilty was introduced. The lawyer for the defense, a man well known for his trickery rather than his ability, seemed particularly desirous of selecting a jury that would not show partiality in decision. The prosecuting attorney, a young and inexperienced man, agreed to every juryman selected by the defense, and the Judge, although he might have thought the defense stepped over the bounds of judicial courtesy, said nothing. The arguments were concluded, leaving in the minds of the people no doubt as to the verdict, for one of the witnesses, a man whose word no one could dispute, swore that he saw the defendant when he stole the animal. The jury retired, and, after a few moments, returned a verdict of not guilty, in exact opposition to the charge of the court.

When the court adjourned the Judge approached the lawyer for the defense and remarked:

"Look here, my friend, I never heard of such a verdict. I cannot, as an impartial disseminator of justice, allow so flagrant an outrage to be perpetrated on this community. That man is as guilty as Judas, but, if you will tell me the secret of the acquittal, I'll allow the verdict to pass."

"You see, Judge, some of the jurymen was rather young and some rather older."

"Yes, but what does that signify?"

"It signifies that I run in the old man's twelve sons on the jury."—Little Rock Gazette.

"Bah!" he exclaimed with an expression of great disgust, after kissing his wife, "I do believe you have been smoking cigarettes—cheap and nasty ones, at that." "It's only too true," she replied, nonchalantly. "I took them out of the bundle you brought home last night."

In this country the complaint has frequently been made that women doctors are not given a fair chance for competition with men, but in Hindoostan no such difficulty exists, as in that country the higher caste women are not permitted to receive attention of male physicians when sick, their only resource being the attendance of old hags whose method of curing all diseases consists of charms and conjurations. Not long ago Miss Beilby, an English missionary, attended the wife of the Rajah of Punna during a dangerous illness, and succeeded in nursing her back to health. On the eve of Miss Beilby's departure for Europe the woman whose life she had saved confided in her a message to Queen Victoria, describing the sufferings of Indian women, and asking that female doctors be sent to their relief. The Queen has signified her intention of thoroughly investigating the matter, and it is to be hoped that she will be as good as her word.

GUITEAU GUILTY.

The most remarkable trial in the annals of American history has at last closed. The jury after an absence of less than an hour from the court room, returned with a verdict of "guilty, as indicted." The defence had been insanity, but the jury, who had heard all the "experts," all the evidence, all the arguments, and in whose presence the prisoner himself had sat for ten weeks, were not convinced that there was any ground for it. The prisoner was given the greatest liberty of speech and action, and, taking advantage of this unparalleled privilege, he never lost an opportunity to revile everything and everybody arrayed against him.

There are a few cases in history that are not unlike Guiteau's in both the cause of the crime, and the plan of carrying it out. The cases of Oxford, Hadfield and Richard Lawrence, are in some respects analogous to it. In the case of Edward Oxford, who, in 1840, attempted to assassinate Queen Victoria and the Prince-consort, while they were driving through the streets in an open carriage, the jury decided that the defendant was insane, and he was accordingly incarcerated at Bedlam, where he possibly may yet be. He was there in 1850—ten years after his trial, and was the object of much curiosity. He had been closely watched there, with a view of detection; and public opinion at the end of the ten years remained divided upon the question of his insanity.—In the case of Lawrence, who attempted to shoot General Jackson in 1836, will be found some features not unlike some in Guiteau's case. He, too, was seen loitering about the President's house before the attack; and he expressed also the opinion that if he could get "rid of Jackson, his successor would do him justice." Another case is that of James Hadfield, who was tried in May, 1800, for "firing a horse pistol loaded with two slugs, at King George III., as his Majesty was entering his box at Drury Lane Theatre." Hadfield was tried for high treason, defended by Erskine, and acquitted on the ground of insanity. Upon his acquital, he was sent to Bedlam, where he died in 1841, after being forty years a prisoner. We can only conjecture what would have been the result of each of these trials had the assassin succeeded in his design upon the life of his victim—and the result in two of the cases at least, would probably have been different.

Brutus claimed as his object in the murder of Julius Cæsar, that he wanted to make this murder a solemn immolation that should strike terror into the souls of the imitators of the tyrant; and his excuse was "not that he loved Cæsar less, but that he loved Rome more." But Cæsar was in no sense a tyrant; he was the pride of Rome—the paragon of men; and Guiteau in claiming to be "greater than Brutus," pays himself a poor compliment. For wherein was Brutus great? He was rather to be pitied for his weakness of mind in allowing Cassius to induce him to commit the deed.

Guiteau says he "has many years yet to live." But whether he be a true prophet or not, the question for years to come, in recalling his crime, will be:

"Are his wits safe? Is he not light of brain?"

Judge Cox, in his charge to the jury, said: "A man might believe a course of action to be right, and the law might forbid it as wrong. Nevertheless, he must obey the law, and nothing could save him from the consequences of the violation of the law, except the fact that he was so crazed by disease as to be unable to comprehend the necessity of obedience." The jury by their verdict, have said that Guiteau is not "so crazed by disease," and, whether he be fool or fiend, he is, by that verdict, doomed to die.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 30.

The assassin's trial is ended at last, and my prognostications as to the result have been fully verified. A feeling of universal satisfaction and congratulation pervaded the Capital Wednesday night when the news circulated throughout the city that the jury after being out only forty minutes had returned a verdict of "guilty." There was little discussion in the jury room and but one ballot to settle the verdict. All were convinced before leaving the court room that the miserable wretch who had been playing his antics before them for ten weeks was responsible to the law for his cruel, villainous deed. It is well-nigh seven months since the National tragedy, which reached its second act on Wednesday, was begun by the shot from Guiteau's pistol. In that brief time the seat of Government has witnessed many changes. An Administration which had but just begun its career, came to a halt, passed through eighty days in painful suspense, and then amid the scenes and ceremonies of mourning gave way to a new and different regime. During all this no gusts of passion were able to overthrow the dignity and equanimity of the American people, and a Government of law and order was maintained while one President, made by law, succeeded another slain by an assassin.

The trial that has followed is in many respects one of the most remarkable in the annals of criminal proceedure. We have seen the cowardly assassinator of the head of the Nation sit in open court and abuse counsel and witnesses in outrageous terms, and when, during the closing hours, he called the venerable and eloquent Porter "a lying whelp," it seemed almost too much for human nature to stand. But the verdict of the jury is consoling. The greatest travesty of the whole thing is the time consumed in reaching justice. There is now, however, no chance for Guiteau to escape pulling hemp sooner or later, unless he dies from fright before the time arrives. He stands not the slightest chance of a new trial or of any relief from the courts. In all that has been done Judge Cox has used the utmost caution to prevent a misfire and his brother Judges have been consulted at every step; so that unquestionably the full bench will sustain the result below. A little delay is the most that Guiteau can hope for. The hanging may be postponed until May, possibly till July, but the performance will eventually take place, as set down in the bills.

The Register and the Receiver of public moneys of the land office at Montgomery, have issued a joint circular to Judges of Probate and Clerks of the Circuit Courts, and others interested in the making of final proofs of homestead entries of public lands, that such proof must be forwarded by the officer before whom they were made, and under his seal as in the practice in the courts of this State in the matter of depositions. The circular is based upon the rulings of the commissioners of the general land office in Washington.

The net earnings of the Langley cotton mill at Augusta, Ga., were twenty-two per cent last year. That's the sort of "Bourbonism" the South is growing solid on, says the Washington Post.

Guiteau's appetite has failed, and he appears much worried. Mr. Scoville and the warden of the jail have agreed that no more of the assassin's blasphemous addresses shall be given out, and that for a week no one shall be permitted to interview him. In his application for a new trial Mr. Scoville will represent that the jury was influenced by being furnished with newspapers.

A Mr. Wells, of Michigan, has recently been on a visit to our county, as the agent and representative of an extensive lumber firm in that State, and after looking around for some days, decided to instruct his company to buy land here and establish saw mills. Mr. Wells selected one thousand acres of timber land in the vicinity of Callierville for this purpose, and expressed himself as agreeably surprised with our section. He says the land is better than the pine lands of Michigan, on which the farmers of that State, by a different system of farming, make money. Mr. Wells says that should his company decide to buy, they will bring a colony to settle on their lands.

There will be a meeting of the Medical and Surgical Society of Chilton County, at the office of the President, in Clanton, on Monday, February 6th, at 11 o'clock A. M. A full attendance is desired, as business of importance will come before the society.

I. D. LANIER, M. D.,
President.

MRS. GARFIELD'S RECEPTION OF THE VERDICT.

CLEVELAND, Jan. 25—All through the trial Mrs. Garfield and the late President's mother have kept their thoughts as far away from it as possible, reading little, if anything, concerning it, and holding little conversation about it. The result of the jury's short deliberation was immediately telegraphed to Mrs. Garfield by a friend at Washington. To a caller this evening she said that there was nothing she could say to the public about it, or that she desired to say. The news was received in Cleveland with grim satisfaction and thankfulness, and when announced from the stage at the two leading places of amusement was received with loud applause. A Mentor farmer, who arrived on the 7 o'clock train, overheard the news, and, taking off his hat, said fervently: "Thank God! it has come at last."

Alabama has 51,540 square miles; is divided into 66 counties; 11 of them 1,000 miles square. The largest is Baldwin, being 1,920 sqr. miles. The smallest are Greene and Etowah, being each only 520 square miles.

LAWS REGULATING NEWSPAPER SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The following, from a judicial officer, is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary are considered wishing to continue the subscription.
2. If subsribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers many continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.
3. If subscibers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed they are held responsible until their bill is paid and they have ordered them discontinued.
4. If subsribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.
5. The courts have decided that refusing to take periodicals from the office on removing and leaving them uncalled for, is prima facie evidence of intentional fraud.
6. Any person who receives a newspaper and makes use of it, whether he has ordered it or not, is held in law to be a subscriber.
7. If subscribers pay in advance they are bound to give notice to the publisher, at the end of the time, if they do not wish to continue taking it; otherwise the publisher is authorized to send it on, and the subscriber will be responsible until an express notice, with payment of arrearages, is sent to the publisher.

MR. SCOVILLE ISSUES AN ADDRESS.

Scoville has issued an address to the American people saying he had defended Guiteau through a long trial against heavy odds, from loyalty to his wife, who is Guiteau's sister, and from belief in the insanity of the prisoner; and the defense therefore require by humanity, and to save the nation from the disgrace of hanging an insane and irresponsible man to gratify popular vengeance, and for the purpose of placing on the record of history the impossibility of an American citizen of sound mind shooting the President of the United States. The verdict is against Guiteau. Scoville's means of living are exhausted and he has incurred debts to support his family during his long absence from business, and his business itself has suffered. To carry the matter further will require the services of additional counsel to argue the points raised in the prisoner's behalf. To pay such counsel, and to afford himself the means to live while the case is pending, he appeals to the public to assist him. Without financial aid he will be compelled to abandon the case to care for his family. Besides the loss of time he has suffered pecuniarily at least $3.000.

Reed has served without fee, but additional counsel so much needed will not serve without compensation. To such of his countrymen as think that the motion for a new trial should be pressed in the interest of justice, humanity or the honor of the country, he appeals for asistance. He asks nothing for himself beyond a subsistence during the two months that the proceedings will consume, but says necessary expenses will require at least $2,000. Should sufficient money not be furnished, what is contributed will be refunded on request. His address, until February 4th, will be George Scoville, Washington.

CAPT. S. F. NUNNELEE.

We see that Col. W. W. Screws is not a candidate for re-election to the office of Secretary of State. In connection with that position, the ensuing election, we can think of no more competent and worthy a man than our worthy contemporary of the Tuskaloosa Gazette, Capt. Steve F. Nunnelee. One of the heroes of the Mexican war—a faithful Confederate soldier—a typo of the typos—an editor of the editors—a good citizen—a sterling and intelligent man—we nominate Capt. Nunnelee by acclamation. What say our brethren of the press?

We cordially second the above nomination. But there is a serious obstacle in the way—Capt. Nunnelee lives in West Alabama.

[Tuskaloosa Clarion.

We throw up our hat for Nunnelee, whether he is from West Alabama, Bagdad, or the Aboriginal isles!

SENSATIONAL.

A special to the Cincinnati Commercial says: A prominent public man said to your correspondent to night: "'President Arthur,' said a Stalwart Republican Congressmen to me to night, 'will pardon the assassin, Guiteau, on the ground that he is insane.' I do not believe he will, and said so, whereupon my friend replied: 'I know that it seems a strange thing to say but it is true, nevertheless. I know what I'm talking about, and you'll acknowledge that I am right before the fourth of July.'"

In order to reduce our Fall and Winter stock, we will sell Gents, Youth's and Boy's Clothing at a great reduction in price. Call at once and secure bargains.

USEFULNESS AND HURTFULNESS OF COFFEE.

Since coffee possesses the quality of stimulating the nervous system, it is a matter of course that in many cases its effect is rather injurious. Phlegmatic people, especially, need coffee, and they are fond of drinking it; for a similar reason it is a favorite beverage in the Orient, where its consumption is immense. But to persons of an excitable temperament the enjoyment of coffee is hurtful; they ought only to take it very weak. With lively children it does not agree at all, and it is very wrong to force them to drink it, as is often done; while elderly people, who are in need of a stimulant for the decreasing activity of their nerves, are right in taking as much of it as they choose.

In households of limited means it is often necessary to use succory with coffee. We do not pretend to pronounce this, if taken in moderate quantity, hurtful; but we do say that it is a poor substitute for coffee, and that there is nothing in it to recommend its use. A far better mixture is milk and sugar; and there is good reason for it; both milk and sugar are articles of food. Milk contains the same ingredients as blood; and sugar is changed in the body into fat, which is indispensable to us, especially in the process of breathing. Having taken no food through the night, the loss our blood has suffered during sleep by perspiration and the fat which has been lost by respiration must be compensated for in the morning. For this milk and sugar in coffee are excellent.

It is good for children to have a taste for sweetened milk or milk-coffee in the morning. We must not find fault with them if they like it. Nature very wisely gave them a liking for sugar; they need it because their pulse must be quicker, their respiration stronger, to facilitate the assimilation of food in their bodies, and also to promote growth. Not that adults need no sugar, but the sugar necessary for them is formed from the starch contained in their food. For this purpose the digestive apparatus must be strongly developed. With children this is not the case; therefore, they are given sugar, instead of the starch to make it from. Many diseases, particularly rickets, prevailing mostly among the children of the poor, are the consequence of feeding the child with bread and potatoes; these contain starch, it is true, but, the digestive apparatus of children being yet too weak to change them into fat, the result is that the flesh falls away and the bones grow soft and crooked.

But he who, to promote digestion, takes coffee immediately after dinner, does best not to use sugar or milk—for both, so far from helping digestion, are an additional burden to the full stomach, and disturb its labor more than coffee can facilitate it.—Popular Science Monthly.

TOO HOT.

A writer in the Portland Transcript gives the following description of the trouble a toad got himself into by not taking care what he ate. He swallowed a wasp, thinking, no doubt, that it was a large but defenseless fly.

The realization of his mistake came when the wasp began pricking his internal organs, as a guilty conscience pricks a sinner.

The toad stood on his hind legs and reached frantically down his throat after that wasp. Failing to dislodge it he turned three somersaults in a manner that would have rivaled the boss tumbler in a circus.

Then he stood up and exclaimed, "Woo coduc! Woo coduc!" which was supposed to be a call for a stomach pump or a quick emetic.

He then made several efforts to stand on his head, but was unsuccessful. Next, he bethought himself of the Greenback doctrine of inflation, and puffed out his sides until he looked like a base ball bat with legs to it. Inflation didn't hit the case, and was soon abandoned.

Again he reached down his throat, but his arm was too short to reach the spot where the wasp was operating.

His head began to swim, and he whopped over on his back and clawed the air like a man overboard. The wasp was evidently unable to continue his infliction of punishment, and the toad began to feel better.

He got upon his feet and with a forefoot carefully examined his ribs upon either side. Finding them all in place, he stretched himself to his utmost height two or three times to see if his legs were in working order, and then hopped a hop or two to make assurance sure.

Being satisfied that he was all there, he gave a croak of relief and hopped under the tomato vines.

A REMARKABLE STATEMENT.

The Unusual Experience of a Prominent Man Made Public.

The following article from the Democrat and Chronicle, of Rochester, N. Y., is of so striking a nature, and emanates from so reliable a source, that it is herewith re-published entire. In addition to the valuable matter it contains, it will be found exceedingly interesting:

To the Editor of the Democrat and Chronicle:

SIR:—My motives for the publication of the most unusual statements which follow are, first, gratitude for the fact that I have been saved from a most horrible death, and, secondly, a desire to warn all who read this statement against some of the most deceptive influences by which they have ever been surrounded. It is a fact that to-day thousands of people are within a foot of the grave and they do not know it. To tell how I was caught away from just this position and to warn others against nearing it, are my objects in this communication.

On the first day of June, 1881, I lay at my residence in this city surrounded by my friends and waiting for death. Heaven only knows the agony I then endured, for words can never describe it. And yet, if a few years previous, any one had told me that I was to be brought so low, and by so terrible a disease, I should have scoffed at the idea. I had always been uncommonly strong and healthy, had weighed over 200 pounds and hardly knew, in my own experience, what pain or sickness were. Very many people who will read this statement realize at times that they are unusually tired and cannot account for it. They feel dull and indefinite pains in various parts of the body and do not understand it. Or they are exceedingly hungry one day and entirely without appetite the next. This was just the way I felt when the relentless malady which had fastened itself upon me first began. Still I thought it was nothing; that probably I had taken a cold which would soon pass away. Shortly after this I noticed a dull, and at times neuralgic, pain in my head, but as it would come one day and be gone the next, I paid but little attention to it. However, my stomach was out of order and my food often failed to digest, causing at times great inconvenience. Yet I had no idea, even as a physician, that these things meant anything serious or that a monstrous disease was becoming fixed upon me. Candidly, I thought I was suffering from Malaria, and so doctored myself accordingly. But I got no better. I next noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids I was passing—also that there were large quantities one day and very little the next, and that a persistent froth and scum appeared upon the surface, and a sediment settled in the bottom. And yet I did not realize my danger, for, indeed, seeing these symptoms continually, I finally became accustomed to them, and my suspicion was wholly disarmed by the fact that I had no pain in the affected organs or in their vicinity. Why I should have been so blind I cannot understand.

There is a terrible future for all physical neglect, and impending danger usually brings a person to his senses, even though it may then be too late. I realized, at last, my critical condition and aroused myself to overcome it. And, Oh! how hard I tried! I consulted the best medical skill in the land. I visited all the prominent mineral springs in America and traveled from Maine to California. Still I grew worse. No two physicians agreed as to my malady. One said I was troubled with spinal irritation; another, nervous prostration; another, malaria; another, dyspepsia; another, heart disease; another, general debility; another, congestion of the base of the brain; and so on through a long list of common diseases, the symptoms of all of which I really had. In this way several years passed, during all of which time I was steadily growing worse. My condition had really become pitiable. The slight symptoms I at first experienced were developed into terrible and constant disorders—the little twigs of pain had grown to oaks of agony. My weight had been reduced from 207 to 130 pounds. My life was a torture to myself and friends. I could retain no food upon my stomach, and lived wholly by injections. I was a living mass of pain. My pulse was uncontrollable. In my agony I frequently fell upon the floor, convulsively clutched the carpet, and prayed for death. Morphine had little or no effect in deadening the pain. For six days and nights I had the death-premonitory hiccoughs constantly. My urine was filled with tube casts and albumen. I was struggling with Bright's Disease of the Kidneys in its last stages.

While suffering thus I received a call from my pastor, the Rev. Dr. Foote, rector of St. Paul's Church, of this city. I felt that it was our last interview, but in the course of conversation he mentioned a remedy of which I had heard much but had never used. Dr. Foote detailed to me the many remarkable cures which had come under his observation, by means of this remedy, and urged me to try it. As a practicing physician and a graduate of the schools, I cherished the prejudice both natural and common with all regular practitioners, and derided the idea of any medicine outside the regular channels being the least beneficial. So solicitous, however, was Dr. Foote, that I finally promised I would waive my prejudice and try the remedy he so highly recommended. I began its use on the first day of June and took it according to directions. At first it sickened me; but this I thought was a good sign for one in my debilitated condition. I continued to take it; the sickening sensation departed and I was able to retain food upon my stomach. In a few days I noticed a decided change for the better as also did my wife and friends. My hiccoughs ceased and I experienced less pain than formerly. I was so rejoiced at this improved condition that, upon what I had believed but a few days before was my dying bed, I vowed, in the presence of my family and friends, should I recover I would both publicly and privately make known this remedy for the good of humanity, wherever and whenever I had an opportunity. I also determined that I would give a course of lectures in the Corinthian Academy of Music of this city, stating in full the symptoms and almost hopelessness of my disease and the remarkable means by which I have been saved. My improvement was constant from that time, and in less than three months I had gained 26 pounds in flesh, became entirely free from pain, and I believe I owe my life and present condition wholly to Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, the remedy which I used.

Since my recovery, I have thoroughly re-investigated the subject of kidney difficulties and Bright's disease, and the truths developed are astounding. I therefore state, deliberately, and as a physician, that I believe MORE THAN ONE-HALF THE DEATHS WHICH OCCUR IN AMERICA ARE CAUSED BY BRIGHT'S DISEASE OF THE KIDNEYS. This may sound like a rash statement, but I am prepared to fully verify it. Bright's Disease has no distinctive symptoms of its own, (indeed, it often develops without any pain whatever in the kidneys or their vicinity,) but has the symptoms of nearly every other known complaint. Hundreds of people die daily, whose burials are authorized by a physician's certificate of "Heart Disease," "Apoplexy," "Paralysis," "Spinal Complaint," "Rheumatism," "Pneumonia," and other common complaints, when in reality it was Bright's Disease of the Kidneys. Few physicians, and fewer people, realize the extent of this disease or its dangerous and insidious nature. It steals into the system like a thief, manifests its presence by the commonest symptoms, and fastens itself upon the constitution before the victim is aware. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families, inheriting it from their ancestors, have died, and yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Instead of common symptoms it often shows none whatever, but brings death suddenly, and as such is usually supposed to be heart disease. As one who has suffered, and knows by bitter experience what he says, I implore every one who reads these words not to neglect the slightest symptoms of Kidney difficulty. Certain agony and possible death will be the sure result of such neglect, and no one can afford to hazard such chances.

I am aware that such an unqualified statement as this, coming from me, known as I am throughout the entire land as a practitioner and lecturer, will arouse the surprise and possible animosity of the medical profession and astonish all with whom I am acquainted, but I make the foregoing statements based upon facts which I am prepared to produce and truths which I can substantiate to the letter. The welfare of those who may possibly be sufferers such as I was, is an ample inducement for me to take the step I have, and if I can successfully warn others from the dangerous path in which I once walked, I am willing to endure all professional and personal consequences.

J. B. HENION, M. D.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 30, 1881.

SOME PROGRESS, ANYHOW.

"Shekel, I understand that you are going to get married; is it so?" asked Gabbleblock of his friend, as they sauntered slowly up the street.

"Well, that depends," answered Shekel. "I am trying to get a woman that's an heiress and the owner of a bad cough."

"And what progress have you made?" was the next query, in an incredulous tone.

"Why," said S., with the air of a man who had made a great achievement, "I've found one with a bad cough."

Gabble was so sympathetic that he insisted on paying for the beer.

"A MAN who'll maliciously set fire to a shed," said Mr. Slow, "and burn up twenty cows, ought to be kicked to death by a donkey—and I'd like to do it myself!"

THE smartest things are often said by maniacs. A resident physician, who was making his rounds in a lunatic asylum found an adult patient riding a hobby-horse. "Riding your hobby, are you?" he said. "No," said the lunatic, "I am riding my hobby-horse." "What is the difference?" said the doctor. "Any one who is riding a hobby-horse can stop when he chooses; but any one who is riding a hobby can't."

HORACE B. DICK, ESQ., associate editor of the Delaware Co. Republican, Chester, Pa., was cured by St. Jacobs Oil of very severe injuries resulting from a fall. His arm appeared to be paralyzed, but the Oil cured him.—Philadelphia Ledger.

DANIEL DREW, the great Wall street speculator, was in his early life a cattle drover, at the princely salary of 75 cents per day, and drove himself into a position where he "rounded up" an income of not less than $25,000,000 per annum.

He Did Not Mince Matters.

A representative of the Lynn (Mass.), Item, in a late ramble throughout that city, gathered, among other scraps of interest and information the following: The first place visited by the reporter was the fruit store of Mr. J. Levett, No. 67 Market street, in response to a rumor that the proprietor had been cured of the rheumatism by the great remedy. Mr. Leavett not being in, the reporter had a talk with his son. Mr. Levett stated that his father had been cured of an exceedingly bad attack of rheumatism by the St. Jacobs Oil. He had the disease in his right arm and shoulder, which became perfectly helpless after being affected a few hours. His pain was so great that he could not rest in comfort or attend to business with any degree of satisfaction. After enduring this sort of thing for some time, he purchased a bottle of the Great German Remedy and began to apply it. He did not mince matters at all, but just used the Oil for all it was worth. After pursuing this mode of treatment for three days the pain was banished and his father was in a perfectly healthy condition. He has never since felt any rheumatism.

"PAPA, how do editors get in free at all the shows?" "Well, sonny, as a general rule they give $25 worth of advertising for a 25-cent ticket."

"Female Complaints."

Dr. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—I was sick for six years, and could scarcely walk about the house. My breath was short and I suffered from pain in my breast and stomach all the time; also from palpitation and an internal fever, or burning sensation, and experienced frequent smothering or choking sensations. I also suffered from pain low down across my bowels and in my back, and was much reduced in flesh. I have used your "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Favorite Prescription," and feel that I am well.

THE Charleston News tells this for true: A lady in that city has a large Brahma cock. A few days ago she had a canary bird. RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: "In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleedings of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as half a dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with diseased lungs will take DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I can positively say it has done more good than all th other medicines I have taken since my sickness."

SIX CTS [illegible]

One of the most manly and satisfying pleasures, as well as the most agreeable, is yachting. The owner of the yacht is one who gathers the chief comfort, as he sails his craft for the excitement of the race, or for the genuine enjoyment of guiding his beautiful vessel over the water. Those who have the care, management and working of a yacht dwell almost upon the water. As a class, they are quiet, sober, careful, skillful men but their life of exposure to the elements is productive of much rheumatism among them, and they suffer considerably from pains, the result of cold, bruises, sprains, &c. ST. JACOBS OIL is a favorite remedy with these men, because of the splendid service it renders them. Captain Schmidt, of Tompkinsville, Staten Island, N. Y., says that he has been a great sufferer from rheumatism for many years. He had severe rheumatic pains in nearly every portion of his body, and suffered so that at times he would be entirely unable to attend to active business. He said: "I am quite well now, however, and, as you see, I am able to work without any trouble. I attribute my recovery entirely to ST. JACOBS OIL, for I felt better as soon as I commenced to use that remedy; and whenever I feel anything like rheumatism coming on, I rub the place with the OIL, and it always does what is claimed for it. Finding ST. JACOBS OIL did me so much good, I got my family to use it whenever they had any pains or colds, and it has done good in every case when they have tried it. I can say that ST. JACOBS OIL is a mighty good rheumatic remedy, and I don't intend to be without it." This experience is such as has been enjoyed not only by yachtsmen and others, who follow the water, but by people in every walk of life and variety of pursuit the whole world over.

GENTLEMEN: I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done the work, I know not what. I give it the credit. J. P. WATSON, Pastor Christian Church, Troy, O.

LIKE A TREE.

BY M. G. DODGE.

A man is very like a tree.
For instance: crooked limbs has he.
He has a trunk; he grows somehow
And when he leaves he makes a bough.
He can be cut; will often lean;
Is always sappy when he's green.
He is aboard when on the sea
And oft a-shaving, too, is he.
When he is frightened quite a lot,
Like trees, he's rooted to the spot.
If he is axed too much he'll lie
And often will, like trees, get "high."
He has his lumber in the night
Is sadly warped and feels the blight.
He "chips" for stakes, though he should not,
And has his chops, sometimes a lot.
He gets "deadwood" on him. Is woo'd.
Is knotty when he should be good.
And when he dies he's sure to learn
That he, like trees, has got to burn.

AMUSING THE CROWD.

A crowd waiting for a train at an up-country railroad station had a heap of fun. An old man came there with a small tin can which he set down on the platform. There was quite a crowd present, and among the gang a farmer with a big yellow dog and a boy with his satanic majesty in his heart. The boy set out to have what he considered fun. While the farmer and the owner of the can were not looking, he inveigled the unsuspicious canine over by the can. Then he produced a cord and tied the can to the dog's tail. These proceedings were watched by many of the bystanders with keen interest. When the job was done, the boy drew away to give the dog a chance to run. But the animal didn't. It just stood and looked miserable. The crowd whooped to start him. The commotion attracted the notice of the farmer and the owner of the can. The farmer was awful mad. He wanted to wallop whoever tied the thing to his dog, and was about to release him, but the old man interposed.

"Run for your lives!" he cried; "there's dynamite in that can, and the minute the dog starts things will be scattered round here like an earthquake had called."

A great change came over the crowd. Their looks of mirthful interest faded. They turned and fled. The dog saw them going, and started after them. The farmer was nearly frantic. He wanted to save his dog, but, after hesitation, turned and fled, too. After him went the dog, on the gallop, dragging the can. It didn't explode at first, but they knew it was liable to at any minute, and they ran like deer. The train came to the station, and the old man who had not fled boarded it and left. Finally the can got detached from the dog's tail. Then the terror of the mob had subsided. They returned to the station. Somebody discovered that the cover of the can had come off. The can contained only two eggs. Half the crowd had intended to take the train, but by fleeing had lost it. They were the maddest men alive. They couldn't get at the old man for he had gone on the train. But they took hold of that boy, and, while two held him, the others took turns with the shingle. His yells were heard two miles away, and the hide on certain parts of him is all tired out. He won't try to amuse a crowd again.—Boston Post.

FURNISHING A NEWSPAPER UNDER DIFFICULTIES.

Seldom in the history of journalism has a newspaper been issued under greater difficulties and amid less congenial surroundings than the News of the Camp, which was published during the 100 days' siege of Pretoria. The editor thus describes the conditions under which the feat was accomplished: "A bungelow for a printing office, with canvas thrown over its unfinished roof, through which the rain freely penetrated, a gentle waterspout running down the compositor's back as he stood with a bandolier of Martini-Henry cartridges over his shoulder, his white apron for a uniform, composing stick in hand and his rifle lying suggestively near his printing frame; the editor's quarters, an army-bell tent and a transport wagon, the space between ingeniously roofed in with a tattered sail stretched on telegraph poles; their work, editing a paper by day and on guard up to the knee in mud by night, or sleeping in a pair of leather breeches, long boots and jack-spurs." The forty numbers, of four pages each, foolscap size, have recently appeared in bound form, embellished with fourteen photographic illustrations of the siege.

NO WONDER there are so many organ-grinders among the Italians when a printing-office foreman gets only $2.70 per week, and an ordinary hand $1.45 to $2 per week. Such low pay amounts to a premium of brigandage.

A ROMANTIC Chicago girl writes from abroad: "I would rather have a grave in America than a home in Europe."

ARTHUR AS A SCHOOL-TEACHER.

How the President Organized Himself Into a Committee of One to Enforce Order and Discipline in a Country School.

[From the Troy Times.]

In the year 1858 the writer attended the district school at Cohoes. The high department did not enjoy a very enviable reputation for being possessed of that respect due from the pupils to teacher. During the year there had been at least four teachers in that department, the last one only remaining one week. The Board of Education had found it difficult to obtain a pedagogue to take charge of the school, until a young man, slender as a May-pole, six feet high in his stockings, applied for the place. He was engaged at once, although having been previously informed of the kind of timber he would be obliged to hew. Promptly at 9 o'clock a. m. every scholar was on hand to welcome the man who said he would "conquer the school or forfeit his reputation." Having called the morning session to order, he said that he had been engaged to take charge of the school. He came with his mind prejudiced against the place. He had heard of the treatment of the former teachers by the pupils, yet he was not at all embarrassed, for he felt that, with proper recognition of each other's rights, teacher and scholars could live together in harmony. He did not intend to threaten, but he intended to make the scholars obey him, and would try and win the good-will of all present. He had been engaged to take charge of that room, and he wished the co-operation of every pupil in so doing. He had no club, ruler or whip, but appealed directly to the hearts of every young man and young lady in the room. Whatever he should do, he would at least show to the people of this place that this school could be governed. He spoke thus and feelingly at times, yet with perfect dignity he displayed that superior executive ability which, in after years, made him such a prominent man. Of course the pupils, especially the boys, had heard fine words spoken before, and at once a little smile seemed to flit across the faces of the leading spirits in past rebellions.

The work of the forenoon began, when a lad of 13 placed a marble between his thumb and finger, and, with a snap, sent it rolling across the floor. As the tall and handsome young teacher saw this act he rose from his seat, and, without a word, walked toward the lad. "Get up, sir," he said. The lad looked at him to see if he was in earnest, then he cast his eye toward the large boys to see if they were not going to take up his defense. "Get up, sir," said the teacher a second time, and he took him by the collar of his jacket as if to raise him. The lad saw he had no common man to deal with, and he rose from his seat. "Follow me, sir," calmly spoke the teacher, and he led the way to the hall, while the boy began to tremble, wondering if the teacher was going to take him out and kill him. The primary department was presided over by a sister of the new teacher, and into this room he led the young transgressor. Turning to his sister, he said: "I have a pupil for you; select a seat for him and let him remain here. If he makes any disturbance whatever inform me." Turning to the boy, he said: "Young man, mind your teacher, and do not leave your seat until I give you permission," and he was gone. The lad sat there, feeling very sheepish, and, as misery loves company, it was not long before he was gratified to see the door open and observe his seat-mate enter with the new teacher, who repeated the orders previously uttered, when he quietly and with dignity withdrew. The number was subsequently increased to three, the teacher returning each time without a word to the other scholars concerning the disposition made of the refractory lads. The effect upon the rest of the school was remarkable. As no intimation of the disposition of the boys was given, not a shade of anger displayed on the countenance of the new teacher, nor any appearances of blood were noticeable upon his hands, speculation was rife as to what he had done with the three chaps. He spoke kindly to all, smiled upon the scholars who did well in their classes, and seemed to inspire all present with the truth of his remarks uttered at the opening of the session. At recess the mystery that had enveloped the school was cleared away, for the three lads in the primary department were seen as the rest of the scholars filed by the door. While all the rest enjoyed the recess, the three lads were obliged to remain in their seats, and, when school was dismissed for the forenoon, the new teacher entered the primary room and was alone with the young offenders. He sat down by them, and, like a father, talked kind words and gave good advice. No parent ever used more fitting words, nor impressed his offspring with the fullness thereof, than did the new teacher. Dismissing them, he told them to go home, and when they returned to school, to be good boys. That afternoon the boys were in their seats, and in two weeks' time there was not a scholar in the room who would not do anything the teacher asked. He was beloved by all, and his quiet manner and cool, dignified ways made him a great favorite. He only taught two terms, and every reasonable inducement was offered to prevail upon him to remain, but without avail. His reply was; "I have accomplished all I intended—namely, conquered what you thought was a wild lot of boys, and received the discipline that I required. I regret leaving my charge, for I have learned to love them, but I am to enter a law office at once." That teacher was Chester A. Arthur, now President of the United States; the teacher of the primary department was his sister, now Mrs. Haynesworth, and the first of the three refractory boys was the writer.

IT is unnecessary at this time, says a contemporary, to recall the catalogue of rascalities in this country during the past six or seven years. With hardly an exception every one of the men concerned in the frauds and robberies are found to have stood as well in the community as Baldwin. Commencing with Carleton, Secretary of the Union Trust, nearly all of the men engaged in robbing the public enjoyed the reputation of being good citizens,

The fact that these men were all educated, highly respectable citizens is well calculated to shake confidence in all men intrusted with the management of financial institutions.

AMONG the inmates of a Western insane asylum is a man who is often perfectly sensible, and when accosted at such times causes visitors to wonder why he is confined there. This inmate entered into conversation the other day with a caller whose dress proclaimed him a clergyman. Said the madman: "It was too bad, was it not, the killing of Grant at Chicago?" "It was," said the minister, who followed the accepted custom of assenting to the statements of lunatics for peace' sake. "Hayes was assassinated at Cincinnati, was he not?" again asked the lunatic. "Yes," replied the clergyman. "And was not Queen Victoria murdered in her palace?" To this query from the madman the clerical visitor once more answered in the affirmative. The lunatic named one after another a dozen living royal personages, all of whom the clergyman was led to admit were put out of the way. Finishing his catechism, the madman turned on the clergyman and said fiercely: "Your dress would show you to be a minister, but you are the worst liar I ever met."

TOO LITERAL.

The short-hand reporters of [illegible], New South Wales, having been found fault with for their method of reporting the speeches in the Legislative Council, retaliated by giving the speech of one of the Council exactly as it was spoken, as follows:

"The reporters—ought not to—the reporters ought not to be the ones to judge of what is important—not to say what should be left out—but—the member can only judge of what is important—.

"As I—as my speeches—as the reports—as what I say is reported sometimes, no one—nobody can understand from the reports—what it is—what I mean. So—it strikes me—it has struck me certain matters—things that appear of importance—are sometimes left out—omitted. The reporters—the papers—points are reported—I mean what the paper thinks of interest—is reported."

This was taking a very cruel revenge, but then, even a reporter is human.

EDITORIAL WORK AND WRITING.

As with private letters, so with editorials; sometimes it gives one real pleasure to write them, while at other times the question uppermost is "What shall I say next?" Usually the professional writer, like the well-bred lady who may be compelled to entertain a bore, can conceal his disinclination and emptiness by a well-selected stock of words, and, as papers are read with very little care, most anything will pass muster. The fact is, newspapers are too cheap to be highly regarded, and yet the brightest gems of literature and the mightiest thoughts have first appeared in this humble garb. To do good newspaper work requires not merely pecuniary but a reasonable amount of moral encouragement. One ought to feel that the reader does not measure his mental efforts with the yard-stick. Precisely as vulgar rich people purchase the largest painting with the finest frame, and pass by with contempt the genuine gem because it is only a few inches square, so ignorant people are apt to judge the newspaper by the size, and the square yards of reading it contains, without regard to quality. Sometimes we dream that the newspaper of the future will be that which values the space of a line more highly than gold, and which will prune until the best, most useful and beautiful remains. But what can a single hand accomplish, with three papers per week on his hands, and an insatiable demand for local trivialities to supply? It is only at rare intervals that he can strike his best gait.

Growing older we become more determined to please ourselves rather than others. A serious defect this doubtless is, and yet it has compensation. The paper is pervaded by a strong individuality, instead of being a colorless transcript, and the intellectual quality is tested by the introduction and treatment of all sorts of topics, out of the common channel. Every one can say something about that of which all are talking, but contributions to general knowledge are the result of a wide course of reading and observation.—Denison (Iowa) Review.

NELSON'S FATAL WOUND AT TRAFALGAR.

A ball from the mizzentop of the "Redoubtable," only fifteen yards distant from where Nelson was standing, struck the epaulette of his left shoulder, about a quarter after nine, during the greatest heat of the action. It passed through the spine, and lodged in the muscles of the neck on the right side. Nelson fell on his face, and on that part of the deck where there yet lay a pool of his secretary's blood; and Capt. Hardy, on turning round, saw three men—a marine sergeant and two sailors—raising him up. "Hardy," said he, faintly, "they have done for me at last." "I hope not," replied his old shipmate. "Yes, my backbone is shot through." As Sergeant Secker and others bore him down the ladder he saw that the tiller ropes had been shot away, and ordered new ones to be rove. He then covered his face and his stars with his handkerchief that the crew, who loved him so well, might remain ignorant of his fate. Through the horrors of the cockpit, which was crowded by the wounded and the dying, he was borne with difficulty to a pallet in the Midshipmen's berth, where it was soon discovered that the wound was mortal; and though aware, by the gush of blood every moment in his breast, that no human skill could avail him, he never lost his presence of mind for a moment. Nothing could be done to lessen his agony, and all his attendants could do was to fan him with paper and give him lemonade to alleviate his intense thirst; and there lay "the mighty Nelson," weaker than a child, with the roar of his last and greatest victory in his dying ear.

A friend sends us the following circular, and writes: "Provisions are high now, but they might be worse; for example, note the inclosed:"

TAKING CARE OF BABIES.

If you wish to have a healthy and good child you must bathe the baby twice a day. There is, perhaps, no cross and irritable man or woman who goes without a daily bath but would be better if it were regularly taken. Your infant will be so much more quiet with daily baths as to fully pay you for your time and trouble in giving them. It will grow up stronger and will be more likely to have cleanly and genteel instincts all through life. Begin with water that is moderately warm, and change gradually, very gradually, to colder water, but not too cold water. A cool bath will be more strengthening than if you keep to the warm water, providing the child is not too delicate to stand it. Do not be in too great a hurry to get the cool bath. Reaction comes only when the child is well, strong and old enough to generate animal heat. A handful of salt may be thrown into the bath. Dry the child quickly and gently, and dust the skin with starch powder that has no scent in it.

Clothing for infants should be light and warm. Through the earlier years—say for three years—a child needs plenty of warmth. Let the feet, abdomen and chest always be healthfully warm. Do not overdo this, however, with heavy garments that will keep the child in a vapor bath of perspiration. The flannel clothing, as well as other dress of the child, must be frequently changed to promote health. All the clothing must be loose enough to give free play to the vital organs.

Be clean in everything pertaining to your rooms, or you will poison the child you love, not enough to kill it, perhaps, but sufficiently to impair vitality and make it harder for the child to live. Keep the child clean or it will poison itself. All discharges from the body are poisonous—those from the skin as well as others. An unpleasant smell that is perceived about many persons, and in their apartments, is known as the odor humanus, or human odor—that is, the smell of dead, foul, poisonous matter, exhaled through the skin, and never washed from the body.

Neither milk nor drinking water should be allowed to stand in open vessels, where it might become contaminated by the germs of disease or from foul or infected air from sinks, drains, cesspools or other sources. Both milk and water readily absorb the germs of a great variety of diseases—as, for instance, diarrhœa, dysentery, typhoid fever, diphtheria, etc.

AMERICAN GOLD WORK AND JEWELRY.

The amount of capital invested in the jewelry trade of the United States, exclusive of silverware, is estimated at upward of $50,000,000. In variety of designs and beauty of workmanship American jewelry is unequaled in any part of Europe. There are, it is said, no less than a thousand different designs in lace pins, as many more in earrings, and an equal variety in many other articles. We have not only the most complete machinery, but the largest establishments in the world, for the manufacture of jewelry. The most extensive house in Europe (a firm in Paris) has but 150 workmen, while a single factory in Newark keeps 500 busy upon genuine gold work in ordinary times, and there are several other American houses which employ from 100 to 300 men each upon high-class goods. The enormous extent of the manufacture here is made more clearly apparent when it is known that these great firms are chiefly engaged in the production of a few specialties. The largest factory mentioned is operated principally for breastpins, earrings, bracelets, chains and lace pins. Another establishment is especially devoted to the making of bracelets and gold and cameo rings, and so on through the different branches of manufacture. The very finest jewelry to be obtained in any modern market is made at a certain workshop in this city, whose productions, impressed with a peculiar originality and beauty in the most minute details, are eagerly taken by the most noted dealers, with but little regard to price.—New York Evening Post.

A STORY of heroism comes to us from the English steamer Edgar on a recent trip from the Senegal. The entire crew, except the Captain and his wife and the mate, were stricken with sickness so that they could take no part in the navigation of the vessel. The Captain suggested to his wife to take the post of "the man at the wheel," while he himself and mate acted as engineer and fireman. The three brought the vessel safe from the west coast of Africa to the European continent.

PLEASANTRIES.

IT goes against the grain to gamble in corn and wheat.

AN election, like a circus, is generally carried on under a canvass.

WHEN a girl rejects an offer of marriage she goes through a slight-of-hand performance.

THE man who was "rocked in the cradle of the deep" must have slept between sheets of water.

AN advertiser in Texas calls for "an industrious man, as a boss hand over 5,000 head of sheep, that can speak Spanish fluently."

"MARRIAGE," said an unfortunate husband, is the churchyard of lovers. "And you men," replied his wife, "are the grave-diggers."

WHY is paper money more valuable than coin? Because you double it when you put it in your pocket, and when you take it out you find it increases.

SAILORS frequently mutiny for an increase in their allowance of grog, and bread riots are of common occurrence, but the only strike for water on record was when Moses smote the rock.

A YOUNG widow was asked why she was going to wed so soon after the death of her first husband. "Oh, la!" said she, "I do it to prevent fretting myself to death on account of dear Tom!"

"I'LL go if I see fit!" was the exclamation of Mrs Tweezers, as her husband demurred at her attending a ball; "I'll go if I see fit." "Very well, then; you'll see fits if you go!" was the crusty reply.

T.—"Where is Block Island?" Polite American—"In Rhode Island." T.—"But how can you put one island in another island?" P. A.—"Oh, that's nothing. We accomplish anything in this country."

A YANKEE woman recently married a Chinese laundryman, and in three days thereafter the happy Celestial appeared at a barber's shop and ordered his pig-tail cut off, saying in explanation: "Too muchee Yankee."

WHEN a Boston girl is presented with a bouquet she says: "Oh, how deliciously sweet! Its fragrance impenetrates the entire atmosphere of the room." A "Down East" girl simply says: "It smells scrumptious; thanks, Reuben."

POSTOFFICE clerk: "Here! your letter is over-weight." Pat: "Over what weight?" Postoffice clerk: "It's too heavy; put another stamp on it." Pat: "Och, git out wid yer foolin'! Sure if I put another stamp on, won't it be heavier still?"

"ANYTHING new?" asked a reporter of an acquaintance. "Yes, the heaviest kind of an item. See that window up there?" The reporter nodded. "Well," said the man, "in that room is the newest thing in town; a boy baby; just born; doctor just gone. You can't find a fresher item."

A MAID, as by court records doth appear,
Whom $50,000 made so dear,
Unto her waiting lover sternly said:
"Forego the weed before we go to wed.
For smoke take flame. I'll be that flame's bright fanner.
To have your Anna, give up your Havana."
The wretch, when thus she brought him to the scratch,
Lit his cigar and threw away the match.

WHEN small boys seek to imitate the example of their elders in some things, disastrous results are liable to follow. In Norfolk county, Va., a couple of 15-year-old boys, named Jasper and Carey, went out hunting, and on their way home concluded to amuse themselves with a mock duel, having, no doubt, discovered that the real article was exceedingly popular in the community. It was agreed to load both guns with powder only, but young Carey had some shot in the pocket where his powder was carried, and the result was that the discharge from his gun, which took effect in the Jasper boy's neck, produced a wound which ended in death. Mock duels seem to be more dangerous than real ones in Virginia.

THIS heroic cure of snake bite is published by Mrs. Mary A. Mansfield in the Sanford (N. C.) Journal: "My son James and Mr. C. W. Thigpen were out on a hunt, when James was bitten on the leg, below the knee, by a very large rattlesnake. Being five miles from home, he bound a cord tight above the wound, and then split his leg to the bone right at the wound. After bleeding about a pint, he stopped the bleeding, put a charge of powder on the wound and touched it off with a match, which burned the flesh to a sear around the wound. All he has to do now is to cure the burn."

THE CHILTON VIEW.

Just three months ago, we came to this county and established THE VIEW. The paper was started under some difficulties and discouragements. But the support which was received, enabled us to surmount all obstacles, and to-day our paper is one of the established institutions of Chilton county. It has become endeared to the people as an enterprise which county pride, if nothing else, should sustain—and sustain well; and we are truly gratified at the support received.

Several attempts had previously been made to establish a newspaper for the county, but these proved unsuccessful, owing to inadequate support. This was due, no doubt, to the fact that the county was too thinly settled, at the time, to sustain such an enterprise. But time, and a consequent rapid increase in population, has removed this obstacle, and THE VIEW, with a steadily increasing circulation, is gaining ground with every issue. We have been cordially received in every portion of the county that we have had an opportunity of visiting, and have been placed under lasting obligations to many prominent citizens for their earnest efforts in extending our circulation. Our advertising space is taken up by enterprising and substantial business men—men who appreciate the value of printer's ink, in this age of the newspaper, the railroad and the telegraph. And we return thanks for their patronage.

In conclusion, we would remind our readers that an important election comes off in our State in August, and we would be glad if each one of our subscribers would induce a friend or neighbor to subscribe for the paper. And we shall, to the best of our ability, endeavor to keep them posted on every matter of interest and importance to the State and county, and to make THE VIEW worthy of their support.

GITEAU SENTENCED.

On the 14th inst., Scoville argued his motion for a new trial in the great case, and Judge Cox overruled the motion and sentenced Guiteau to be hung on the 30th of June. After a short review of the case, Judge Cox passed the following sentence:

That you be taken hence to the common jail of the District, from whence you came, and there be kept in confinement, and on Friday, the 30th day of June, 1882, you be taken to the place of execution within the walls of said jail, and there between the hours of 12 m. and 2 p. m. you be hanged by the neck until you are dead, and may the lord have mercy on your soul.

During the reading Guiteau stood apparently unmoved and with his eyes riveted on the Judge, but when the final words were spoken, he struck the table violently and shouted:

"And may the Lord have mercy on your soul. I'd rather stand where I do, than where that jury does and where your honor does. I stand here as God's man, and God Almighty will curse every man who had a part in procuring this unrighteous verdict. Nothing but good has come from Garfield's removal, and that will be the verdict of posterity on my inspiration. I don't care a snap for the verdict of this corrupt generation, and would rather, a thousand times, be in my position than in that of those who have hounded me to death. I shall have a glorious flight to glory, but that miserable scoundrel Corkhill will have a permanent job down below, where the devil is preparing for him."

After apparently talking himself out, the prisoner turned to his brother and, without the slightest trace of excitement, conversed for some moments before being taken from the court room.

LETTER FROM FLORIDA.

COST OF A TRIP TO THE PENINSULA STATE—SCENES ALONG THE ROUTE.

TAMPA, FLA., January 30, 1882.

EDITOR VIEW: Dear Sir—I left home on Sunday, the 8th of January, to recuperate my health in the "Land of Flowers." Stopped over in Montgomery, on the 9th, on business. Eat oysters at Dave Fleming's, who always serves up "Mobile plants" just about eight. Called for fish at the Ruby fried in cotton seed oil, and if the cook did not play off on me, don't think any person can tell the difference between fish fried in cotton seed oil and those fried in lard. Monday, the 9th, it rained most of the day, but Tuesday's sun arose as clear and bright as a "May morning." It seemed as though the soft breezes of Florida had been wafted that far north, to meet and welcome my return to the "Land of Flowers." Bought a through ticket via Eufaula, and Way Cross Short Line to Cedar Keys, Fla. Checked my baggage through to Cedar Keys. Price of ticket from Montgomery to Cedar Keys, $19.15. Paid $3 for seat and birth in sleeping car, and did not have to change cars till I reached Callahan, Fla.

Left Montgomery at 8:20 and arrived at Eufaula about noon.—Had dinner at Smithville, Ga., at 3 p. m. "Everybody" was hungry and we did ample justice to the excellent dinner served up at the railroad dinner house. It would take up too much room to give the bill of fare, will only say that we had meats and vegetables in abundance and great variety, two or or three kinds of pastry and cake, and, wonderful to tell, wine! yes, genuine scuppernong wine. Would advise all my friends to take dinner at this house, and they will not want any supper. (I did not.) Did not learn the name of the landlord, but he's a big jolly looking old fellow. Looks like a "Georgia major," and perhaps from his appearance has been in the habit of taking a little old Kentucky bourbon all his life just for his "stomach's sake," and possibly he may be in the habit of setting his guests an example in drinking his scuppernong wine. Long may he live.

The trains through middle and southern Georgia make slow time, and give passengers a chance to look at a very poor country, and get accustomed to what they will CERTAINLY see in Florida. It is mostly a "poor, piney woods" country, all the way through Georgia and Florida to Cedar Keys. Some steam saw mills on the railroad, but they seem to be doing only a "local business," and have very little lumber stacked. There may be some large mills in some parts of Georgia, and I know there are extensive mills near Pensacola, Fla., but I am satisfied that the Pratt Saw Mill Company, and Smith, Taft and Marbury have more lumber stocked than there is at all the Mills between Smithville, Ga, and Cedar Keys, Fla.

Conductor on sleeper was very clever and accommodating, so was the waiter or "valet de chambre." The latter was a gentleman of African descent, tall, well formed and rather distinguished in appearance, "white oak tan" in color, and black, curly hair, and looked like he might have been descended from an "African princes" and a "Kentucky aristocrat." He was so clever and accommodating that I took a great liking to him, but when we parted next morning at Callahan, instead of asking him for a "lock of his hair," I dropped a quarter in to his expectant hand, and we exchanged adieus, "till we meet again."

We arrived at Callahan at 7 o'clock a. m., only 23 hours from Montgomery. Lay over till 11:40, then took the Transit railroad for Cedar Keys, arrived there at 6 p. m., Wednesday, and had to lie over till 7 p. m. Friday. Steamers leave Cedar Keys for Tampa on Mondays and Fridays at 7 o'clock p. m. If I had known the days of sailing, could have saved four dollars hotel bill. Parties leaving Montgomery on Sundays and Thursdays, will make close connection with the boats, but if they want to stop one day in Cedar Keys, can leave Montgomery on Saturdays and Wednesdays. There are two hotels in Cedar Keys, the Suwanee House at $3 per day, and the Gulf House, at $2. Plenty of fish and oysters here, but the oyster's are not like our Mobile plants in size and flavor. Sent my baggage aboard the boat for Tampa about 4 o'clock p. m., Friday. Went by the ticket office, but, as usual, the ticket agent was not in, so went on board without my ticket The steward gave me a berth. Lay down till supper. After supper the passengers came, in crowds from the train that had just arrived, and I began to count noses and berths, and soon figured out that some one would have to sleep on the floor; felt like Simon Suggs did when his wife informed him that the flour barrel was empty, "knew that somebody was bound to suffer, but did not want it to be Simon or his family." As I had not paid and had not registered my name on the steamers books, and the new passengers were calling for the Purser and Captain on every side, I became alarmed and thought perhaps I might be the poor unfortunate one that might have to occupy the floor instead of a pleasant berth, so I started out in the dark to find the Purser, could not find him, but found the Captain on the wharf. Said I wanted to pay and register my name. The Captain said he did not have time to attend to it then. I had always heard it said that possession was equal to nine points in law. So I very quietly went to bed, although it was only 7 o'clock. Waked up, I suppose about 12 o'clock, and saw one man sleeping on the table, with nothing under him but the table cloth, and another one stretched on four chairs, with not even a pillow under his head. I was thankful, and turned over in my berth and went to sleep again.

About daylight next morning the fog rolled up so densely that we had to cut off steam and let the boat drift for two or three hours, till the fog cleared up and we could see our way. After breakfast paid my fare, $8. Making total railroad and steamer fare (and sleeper fare, $3, if you take it) $30.15, and three meals, all that is necessary $31.65. By making close connections, the run from Montgomery to Tampa can be made in 56 hours. If you think this worth publishing, will in my next tell you something about what we have to eat down here and about the country, the citizens, climate soil and productions. Yours,

W. L. B.

GITEAU ON ICE.

PHILADELPHIA, Penn., Jan. 31.

A Washington dispatch having stated that Mr. Scoville, Guiteau's brother-in-law had received a letter from a friend in Philadelphia engaged in the manufacture of refrigerators and cooling apparatus proposing to preserve the assassin's body immediately after hanging, and place it on exhibition in this country and in Europe, half the proceeds of the exhibition to be paid to Guiteau's relatives, a reporter of the Press to-day hunted up the enterprising manufacturer of refrigerators. The story was abundantly verified, and it was discovered that Scoville has substantially upheld the proposition for the reigeration and exhibititn of the assassin's corpse.

The successful man is Mr. Ridgeway. He said to the reporter: "It is a curious coincidence, but just as you entered the office I finished reading a letter that I had received but a moment before from Washington. Here it is (taking up the letter which the reporter had seen him place upon the desk). It is from Scoville, and relates to this very subject you ask me about. This is what he says:"

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30, 1882.

MR. J. H. RIDGEWAY, ESQ.:

Dear Sir—Yours of the 28th inst, received. The relatives are inclined to regard your proposition favorably. In case of death, the brain will have to be removed for post mortem examination.

The happy couple are now in the meridian of life. We extend congratulations, and best wishes for a long life of happiness and prosperity.

Noticing the improvements in our county, we find that Verbena is to build a large hotel, which will make that point a popular summer resort; Lomax is to be the terminus of a railroad, now being built, to the ore beds; Callierville is selling land to Michigan lumber men, and there are rumors that a large sum has been invested by capitalists in property around Clanton. Whether these rumors are "air castles" we are not prepared to say, but we trust that they are not.

Sheriff Lowe came up on last Sunday to levy on the stock of goods formerly owned by the scoundrel who went by the name of Charles Jones, who sold out to a man calling himself Finch. Mr. Collier was sent for to do the writing of deeds. When Mr. Lowe arrived, the store was closed, and a noise inside indicated that the goods were being boxed up. Admission being refused the Sheriff, a guard was placed around the store to prevent the removal of goods. During the night Mr. Collier came and advised Finch to open the door. Finch did so, and the Sheriff found Newton Langston, Lum Langston and James M. Harris with Finch, and the goods nearly all taken down and boxed. No doubt these men intended helping Finch carry off the goods, had a guard not been placed around. Finch is under bond.

The editor of the View spent Saturday in our city, where he is always welcome.

A JAUNT JOURNALISTIC.

EXCITEMENT AT JEMISON—RASCALITY RAMPANT—A BUG FROM BUGSNORTEN—THE COUNTY BOARDING HOUSE REINFORCED.

On last Saturday, we took a run to Jemison, in order to inquire into the matter herein related, for the purpose of giving it to our readers as correctly as possible.

It seems that about ten days since a man known as Charles Jones, and a merchant of Jemison, sold out his stock of goods to a Mr. Finch, who claims to be from Georgia, and who says that he came to Jemison for the purpose of buying out Jones. On the night after he arrived, the deeds were made out by which the stock was transferred to said Finch. Jones then left, on the next train, for parts unkown, leaving unpaid bills to the amount of several thousand dollars. About $1,000 of this amount is due to Schloss & Kahn, wholesale grocers, Montgomery. The names of the other creditors we did not learn. A day or two before Jones left, he received a large bill of goods from Louisville, which bill he also left unpaid. Finch says he supposed the goods were all paid for when he bought them. Some, however, think that he is an accomplice of Jones. Telegrams were sent to the point in Georgia, which he claims to have hailed from; but no reply was received. Jones came to Jemison several years ago as a tramp, and has since been engaged in various vocations. Previous to opening a store he had been keeping a bar room; and the sale of liquor being prohibited about a year ago, he was forced to change. He never stood very well with the people of Jemison, and they are now justly indignant at his rascally conduct.

A "BIG BUG" BAGGED AT BUGSNORTEN.

Some time since a negro, giving his name as Tom Cutts, and who had been working for Mr. W. H. Shelby, at Glasgow, a small settlement three miles west of Jemison, otherwise known by the euphonious name of "Bugsnorten," was arraigned before Justice Lawhorn, of Jemison, for stealing a mule from Dr. McNeill, near that place. He was bound over to appear before the grand jury, and was brought down by deputy Garner and placed in jail. On arrival, the prisoner was recognized as having been in the employ, a short while, of one of our citizens, whose premises he had left very precipitately, carrying with him a large augur. The augur was found one morning recently at the back door of Bandy & Allen's store, and an attempt had been made to get into the store by boring around the lock of the door. He was frightened away by the approach of Mr. John Garner, who happened to be passing by, and who heard him running but did not see him. From the circumstances, it is probable that the same negro who stole the mule attempted to burglarize the store, and other circumstantial evidence indicates that he also attempted to rob a store in Clanton, during his sojourn here. He is now in jail to await the finding of the grand jury, whose duty it will be to wind up the tale of this dark-skinned outlaw from Bugsnorten.

BENSON DOTS.

A long time has elapsed since I gave you a dot, but nevertheless, I have lost no interest for the View. The future will find me at the proper post. Farmers are doing all they can, in making preparations for another crop, however, the weather is so bad, farm work progresses very slowly. The guano question is at a low ebb here. Farmers say they are going to discontinue its use. Wise decision that. Wheat and oats are looking well. The prospect is flattering for good crops of this cereal.

Mr. J. L. Williams has been spending a few days in the vicinity of Lomax surveying land for the new branch railroad, running from Lomax to the ore beds. Ores are in almost inexhaustible quantities, and soon, by the able management of the untiring and energetic contractor, Maj. Tate, those ores will be converted into iron, and distributed throughout the country. The work upon the road is progressing finely, and in a short time the engine's whistle will be heard among the hills of Walnut creek.

A NEWSPAPER NOTICE.

"Are you the editor?" said a man who wore a conciliatory smile and a dyed beard, as he took a seat in our office.

We acknowledged that at present we served and instructed the public in that capacity, and to prove our assertion we showed him the blisters made on our hands by our exertions in operating the Archimedean lever that moves the world.

"Well, I want you to surprise me by a flattering personal notice in your paper. I'm going to run for constable in the Eighth ward, and I want something neat in the way of a send-off."

"Our columns are always open to advance the best interests of the public, but we shall first expect you to surprise us with a pecuniary compensation, not necessarily for publication, but merely as a pledge of good faith."

"I'll pay. A man can't expect to be surprised without paying for it in advance. What have you got?"

"We can accommodate you with any kind of a personal notice, from a cheap electro-plated biography to an eighteen-carat obituary, and at a scale of prices varying according to the amount of strain on our columns and veracity. In molding public opinion we defy competition. Now, how would you like this? It is a neat little pre-Raphaelite gem, and will cost you only $1.50?

"Our enterprising townsman, Col. B——, than whom there is no more popular and genial gentleman in the length and breadth of our great Empire State, has consented, at the earnest solicitation of many friends, to sacrifice his very profitable private business for the public good, and has authorized us to announce him as a candidate for the office of constable of this precinct."

"If that is not strong enough, here is a Michael Angelo, full length, in which your good qualities of head and heart will be touchingly alluded to, and you will be commended for your generous impulses—only $2.50 each insertion. Then we have a brilliant thing, after Mozart, which is really intended for Gubernatorial candidates—speaks of your simplicity of character, jean clothes and pay-as-you-go proclivities—but it can be easily modified to suit a prospective constable. It will cost you $3. There are several others from $2 to $10 each. For referring to you as an old landmark, $1 extra is charged."

"I reckon you can saw me off three dollars' worth; but you must throw in something about my brilliant war record."

"We always do that."

"And just wind up by surprising Capt Bill Smiko. He is running against me. I wouldn't say anything he might take offense at. Only say he is not fit for the office, because he has the record of a convict. You might add that my brother hasn't got a wife that has fits. I don't care to lug any personalities into this campaign unless I am obliged to."

"We can't do it, Colonel. Your rival is our personal friend. He is a subscriber."

"Pshaw! I thought you were running an independent paper in the interest of the people, but I see you are the subsidized organ of a political clique," and off he went to see the editor of the other paper.—Texas Siftings.

MEN OF THE WORLD.

The thoughts of worldly men are forever regulated by a moral law of gravitation, which, like the physical one, holds them down to earth. The bright glory of day, and the silent wonders of a star-lit night, appeal to their minds in vain. There are no signs in the sun or in the moon, or in the stars, for their reading. They are like some wise men, who, learning to know each planet by its Latin name, have quite forgotten such small heavenly constellations as Charity, Forbearance, Universal Love and Mercy, although they shine by night and day so brightly that the blind may see them; and who, looking upward at the spangled sky, see nothing there but the reflection of their own great wisdom and book learning. It is curious to imagine these people of the world, busy in thought, turning their eyes toward the countless spheres that shine above us, and making them reflect the only images their minds contain. The man who lives but in the breath of Princes has nothing in his sight but stars for courtiers' breasts. That envious man beholds his neighbors' honors even in the sky; to the money hoarder, and the mass of worldly folk, the whole great universe above glitters with sterling coin, fresh from the mint, stamped with the sovereign's head, always coming between them and heaven, turn where they may. So do the shadows of our own desires stand between us and our better angels, and thus brightness is eclipsed.—Charles Dickens.

AT the police headquarters in Paris a very mature lady is called up as witness. The President: "Your age?" The lady, with hesitation: "Thiry-nine years, sir." The President, benevolently: "Have a little courage, my dear lady—go on."

AFTER all the arguments about cheapness and quality it appears that Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is the best remedy for the cure of Coughs and Colds ever offered to the public. The price is only 25 cents a bottle and every druggist in the land sells and recommends it.

EXCITEMENT IN ROCHESTER.

The Commotion Caused by the Statement of a Physician.

An unusual article from the Rochester, N. Y., Democrat and Chronicle, was published in this paper recently and has been a subject of much conversation, both in professional circles and on the street. Apparently it caused even more commotion in Rochester, as the following from the same paper shows:

Dr. J. B. Henion, who is well known not only in Rochester but in nearly every part of America, sent an extended article to this paper, a few days since which was duly published, detailing his remarkable experience and rescue from what seemed to be certain death. It would be impossible to enumerate the personal enquiries which have been made at our office as to the validity of the article, but they have been so numerous that further investigation of the subject was deemed an editorial necessity.

With this end in view a representative of this paper called on Dr. Henion, at his residence on St. Paul street, when the following interview occurred: "That article of yours, Doctor, has created quite a whirlwind. Are the statements about the terrible condition you were in, and the way you were rescued such as you can sustain?"

"Every one of them and many additional ones. Few people ever get so near the grave as I did and then return, and I am not surprised that the public think it marvelous. It was marvelous."

"How in the world did you, a physician, come to be brought so low?"

"By neglecting the first and most simple symptoms. I did not think I was sick. It is true I had frequent headaches; felt tired most of the time; could eat nothing one day and was ravenous the next; felt dull indefinite pains and my stomach was out of order, but I did not think it meant anything serious."

"But have these common ailments anything to do with the fearful Bright's diseases which took so firm a hold on you?"

"Anything? Why, they are the sure indications of the first stages of that dreadful malady. The fact is, few people know or realize what ails them, and I am sorry to say that too few physicians do either."

"That is a strange statement, Doctor."

"But it is a true one. The medical profession have been treating symptoms instead of diseases for years, and it is high time it ceased. We doctors have been clipping off the twigs when we should strike at the root. The symptoms I have just mentioned or any unusual action or irritation of the water channels indicate the approach of Bright's disease even more than a cough announces the coming of consumption. We do not treat the cough, but try to help the lungs. We should not waste our time trying to relieve the headache, stomach, pains about the body or other symptoms, but go directly to the kidneys, the source of most of these ailments."

"This, then, is what you meant when you said that more than one-half of the deaths which occur arise from Bright's disease, is it Doctor?"

"Precisely. Thousands of so-called diseases are torturing people to-day, when in reality it is Bright's disease in some one of its many forms. It is a Hydraheaded monster, and the slightest symptoms should strike terror to every one who has them. I can look back and recall hundreds of deaths which physicians declared at the time were caused by paralysis, apoplexy, heart disease, puemonia, malarial fever and other common complaints which I see now were caused by Bright's disease."

"And did all these cases have simple symptoms at first?"

"Every one of them, and might have been cured as I was by the timely use of the same remedy—Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I am getting my eyes thoroughly opened in this matter and think I am helping others to see the facts and their possible danger also. Why, there are no end of truths bearing on this subject. If you want to know more about it go and see Mr. Warner himself. He was sick the same as I, and is the healthiest man in Rochester to-day. He has made a study of this subject and can give you more facts than I can. Go, too, and see Dr. Lattimore, the chemist, at the University. If you want facts there are any quantity of them showing the alarming increase of Bright's disease, its simple and deceptive symptoms, and that there is but one way by which it can be escaped."

Fully satisfied of the truth and force of the Doctor's words, the reporter bade him good day and called on Mr. Warner at his establishment on Exchange street. At first Mr. Warner was inclined to be reticent, but learning that the information desired was about the alarming increase of Bright's disease, his manner changed instantly and he spoke very earnestly:

"It is true that Bright's disease has increased wonderfully, and we find, by reliable statistics, that in the past ten years its growth has been 250 per cent. Look at the prominent men it has carried off: Everett, Sumner, Chase, Wilson, Carpenter, Bishop, Haven and others. This is terrible and shows a greater growth than that of any other known complaint. It must be plain to every one that something must be done to check this increase or there is no knowing where it may end."

"Do you think many people are afflicted with it to-day who do not realize it, Mr. Warner?"

"Hundreds of thousands. I have a striking example of this truth which has just come to my notice. A prominent professor in a New Orleans medical college was lecturing before his class on the subject of Bright's disease. He had various fluids under microscopic analysis and was showing the students what the indications of this terrible malady were. In order to draw the contrast between healthy and unhealthy fluids he had provided a vial the contents of which were drawn from his own person. 'And now, gentlemen,' he said, 'as we have seen the unhealthy indications, I will show you how it appears in a state of perfect health,' and he submitted his own fluid to the usual test. As he watched the results his countenance suddenly changed—his color and command both left him and in a trembling voice he said: 'Gentlemen, I have made a painful discovery; I have Bright's disease of the kidneys,' and in less than a year he was dead."

"You believe then that it has no symptoms of its own, and is frequently unknown even by the person who is afflicted with it?"

"It has no symptoms of its own and very often none at all. Usually no two people have the same symptoms, and frequently death is the first symptom. The slightest indications of any kidney difficulty should be enough to strike terror to any one. I know what I am talking about for I have been through all the stages of kidney disease."

"You know of Dr. Henion's case?"

"Yes, I have both read and heard of it."

"It is very wonderful is it not?"

"A very prominent case, but no more so than a great many others that have come to my notice as having been cured by the same means."

"You believe then that Bright's disease can be cured?"

"I know it can. I know it from the experience of hundreds of prominent persons who were given up to die by both their physicians and friends."

"You speak of your own experience, what was it?"

"A fearful one. I had felt languid and unfitted for business for years. But I did not know what ailed me. When, however, I found it was kidney difficulty I thought there was little hope and so did the doctors. I have since learned that one of the physicians of this city pointed me out to a gentleman on the street one day, saying: 'there goes a man who will be dead within a year.' I believe his words would have proven true if I had not fortunately secured and used the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure."

"And this caused you to manufacture it?"

"No, it caused me to investigate. I went to the principal cities with Dr. Craig, the discoverer, and saw the physicians prescribing and using it and saw that Dr. Craig was unable with his facilities, to supply the medicine to thousands who wanted it. I therefore determined, as a duty I owed humanity and the suffering, to bring it within their reach, and now it is known in every part of America, is sold in every drug store, and has become a household necessity."

The reporter left Mr. Warner, much impressed with the earnestness and sincerity of his statements, and next paid a visit to Dr. S. A. Lattimore at his residence on Prince street. Dr. Lattimore, although busily engaged upon some matters connected with the State Board of Health, of which he is one of the analysts, courteously answered the questions that were propounded to him:

"Did you make a chemical analysis of the case of Mr. H. H. Warner, some three years ago, Doctor?"

"Yes, sir."

"What did this analysis show you?"

"The presence of albumen and the tube casts in great abundance."

"And what did the symptoms indicate?"

"A serious disease of the kidneys."

"Did you think Mr. Warner could recover?"

"No, sir. I did not think it possible. It was seldom, indeed, that so pronounced a case had, up to that time, ever been cured."

"Do you know anything about the remedy which cured him?"

"Yes, I have chemically analyzed it and upon critical examination, find it entirely free from any poisonous or deleterious substances."

We publish the foregoing statement in view of the commotion which the publicity of Dr. Henion's article has caused and to meet the protestations which have been made. The standing of Dr. Henion, Mr. Warner, and Dr. Lattimore in the community is beyond question and the statements they make cannot for a moment be doubted. They conclusively show that Bright's disease of the kidneys is one of the most deceptive and dangerous of all diseases, that it is exceedingly common, alarmingly increasing, and that it can be cured.

WEIGHING A STAR.

The power we have of weighing a star is, without contradiction, one of the most surprising of the results of the advancement of the sciences; that one, indeed, which permits of the most doubt in the mind of persons unacquainted with celestial mechanics.

The mass, or weight, of a star is calculated by the energy of the action that it throws around it. If the earth were ten times heavier than it is, preserving still the same volume, it would draw bodies toward its surface ten times more forcibly than it now does, and an object which, in falling, drops sixteen feet in the first second of time would then drop 160 feet in that time. If the earth, still preserving its volume, had the mass of the sun, it would attract bodies with an energy increased 324,000 times, and an object which now weighs one pound would then weigh 324,000 pounds; a man of the mean weight of 160 pounds would weigh more than 50,000,000 of them! We measure the weight of a star by the intensity of the attraction to its surface. Reduced to its simple expression, in its application to the fall of bodies, this attraction would be difficult to verify; but we can determine it by the velocity of a satellite gravitating around a star whose mass we wish to know. For example, the attraction of the earth has the power of curving the straight line which would be followed by the moon in space if this attraction did not exist, and it bends the line in its attraction in such a way that the moon runs round the circumference of a circle in twenty-seven days seven hours and forty-three minutes. If the mass, or the energy, of the earth should increase the velocity of the moon in its orbit would also be augmented; if the mass should be diminished the contrary effect on the moon's orbit would be produced. The velocity of the motion of the moon around the earth comes from this same force of the earth. The earth is the hand which causes the moon to turn in the sling. If the earth had more force, more energy, than it really has, it would cause the moon to turn more swiftly, and vice versa. If the sun should increase in weight the earth and the other planets would turn more rapidly around it, and years would decrease in length. If the mass of the sun should decrease the contrary results would take place. By comparing the action of the sun on the earth with the action of the earth on the moon we have found that the sun is 324,000 times more energetic, more powerful, more heavy than the earth.—Prof. P. A. Towne.

Voice of the People.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.:

I had a serious disease of the lungs, and was for a time confined to my bed and under the care of a physician. His prescriptions did not help me. I grew worse, coughing very severely. I commenced taking your "Golden Medical Discovery," and it cured me. Yours respectfully,

"I'm not very proud of your progress in school," remarked a mother to her son, who was struggling along in grade five. "There's Charlie Smart is way ahead of you, and he isn't as old." "I know it. Teacher said he'd learned all there was to learn in my room, and that left me without anything to learn."

"Made New Again."

MRS. WM. D. RYCKMAN, St. Catherines, Ont., says: "R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y.: I have used your 'Favorite Prescription,' 'Golden Medical Discovery,' and 'Pleasant Purgative Pellets,' for the last three months and find myself—(what shall I say)—'made new again' are the only words that express it. I was reduced to a skeleton, could not walk across the floor without fainting, could keep nothing in the shape of food on my stomach. Myself and friends had given up all hope, my immediate death seemed certain. I now live (to the surprise of everybody) and am able to do my own work."

BEN HILLIARD, of Washington county, Ga., is perhaps the greatest sufferer in the world. He has been thirty-three years in his bed, enduring the most excruciating agony from rheumatism, unable to move any part o[illegible] body except his lower jaw and to[illegible]tly shrug his shoulders. For all those [illegible]ng years of suffering his joints have b[illegible]n as stiff as if grown together solid.

EATING IN THE WEST INDIES.

Strange as it may seem at first sight, everybody in the West Indies eats very large meals. The climate is so hot you must take food freely to make up losses, and the appetite has to be stimulated by a great variety of dishes, as well as by the copious use of those very insidious capsicums, and the still more delicious little red and yellow bird-peppers. A few of these tempting fruits are placed in salt-cellars at every meal, and, with the bright tropical flowers which invariably garnish the table in pretty specimen vases, they give a general air of pleasant esthetic refinement to the whole arrangements. Breakfast is a really solid and substantial repast, usually put off till half-past 10 or 11 o'clock, the pangs of pressing hunger being stilled before the early morning canter by a cup of coffee in the bedroom. With it sometimes comes a cassava-cake, one of the best Jamaica institutions, made by the negro villagers from the roughly-scraped meal of the arrow-root plant. This meal is rolled into a thin paste, and then baked hard and dry into round cakes, about the thickness of a Scotch oatmeal bannock but much more delicate in taste.

A CHICAGO girl died of lockjaw superinduced by wearing shoes two sizes too small for her. Her feet were not fashionably small, and she endeavored to compress them. What agony the poor thing must have suffered! Well might she have sung with Goldsmith—

And e'en while fashion's brightest arts decoy,
The heart, distrusting, asks if this be joy.

DR HARTER'S IRON TONIC

Endorsed and recommended by the medical profession, for Dyspepsia, General Debility, Female Diseases, Want of Vitality, Nervous Prostration, and Convalescence from Fevers, &c.

GENTLEMEN: I was suffering from general debility to such an extent that my labor was exceedingly burdensome to me. A vacation of a month did not give me much relief, but on the contrary, was followed by increased prostration and sinking chills. At this time I began the use of your IRON TONIC, from which I realized almost immediate and wonderful results. The old energy returned and I found that my natural force was not permanently abated. I have used three bottles of the Tonic. Since using it I have done twice the labor that I ever did in the same time during my illness, and with double the ease. With the tranquil nerve and vigor of body, has come also a clearness of thought never before enjoyed. If the Tonic has not done [illegible] work, I know [illegible] what. I give it the credit.

J. P. WATSON, Pastor Christian Church, Troy, O.

The Iron Tonic is a preparation of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark, and Phosphates, associated with the Vegetable Aromatics. It serves every purpose where a Tonic is necessary.

Ah, still I see your soft, white hand

Against my cheeks; down the field
Your Queen
ides slow, her soft cry all between,
And checks me unaware.
Ah me! the little battle's done,
isperst is all its chivalry;
ull many a move, since then, have we ad life's perplexing checkers made nd many a game with fortune played,
What is it we have now?
This, this at least—if this alone;
hat never, never, never more,
s in those old still nights of yore
(Ere we were grown so sadly wise),
Can you and I shut out the skies,
hut out the world and wintry weather,
And, ever exchanging warmth with eyes,
lay chess, as then we played together!

A QUEER STORY.

of the Perils of Railway Traveling in Great Britain.

he crime of Lefroy caused the great gitation in England concerning the em of traveling by railway. Mr. ouchere took advantage of the ex- ment to publish a remarkable story trating the perils of that system. drawn from real life, and records adventures of Rev. Jude Gloam, a young clergyman, who had taken a more than usual at supper, and of Aviss, an equally shy young lady, m he accosted on the train.

is the curse of shy men that, getting ttle practice in conversing with en, they never know where to stop n, peradventure, they do get a ce of talking. It is by shy men the rudest things are habitually and done through sheer inexperi- . Mr. Gloam had no idea that he transgressing the proprieties. He ght he was making himself very po- and agreeable.

I say, Miss—Aviss," stuttered the . Jude, with a leer, "supposing e were a piece of mistletoe in this iage?"

o answer from the girl, but her eyes ed wide, and she shrank up, trem- g, in her corner of the carriage.

I-I think there is a piece; look e!" continued the foolish man, ting to the lamp in the ceiling, for eant to be facetious.

e girl was now fairly frightened, moved from her seat to the further er of the carriage. She had heard runken ruffians insulting ladies in ay carriages, and she set down her red companion as being drunk, and ubly a ruffian. No doubt his cleri- garb was only a disguise.

What are you running away for?" d Mr. Gloam, and he rose to follow with an unsteady gait, caused not nuch by tipsiness—for he was not ilarly tipsy—as by the oscillation of train. But to the affrighted girl saw him stagger it looked as if he dangerously inebriated.

If you approach another step, sir, I scream!" cried she, starting up, all the color fled from her face.

What for?" asked the Rev. Jude, putting his hand out to steady him- he quite unintentionally rested it er shoulder. The movement of re which this apparant assault caused girl to make threw Mr. Gloam off balance, and he plumped into the from which she had risen. This increased the girl's fright, and wild- ening the window of the carriage screamed "Help! Help! Murder!" an instant Mr Gloam was sobered. girl's shrieks cleared all the fumes ine from his brain and showed him hat a desperate position he had d himself. "For God's sake, don't m like that," he implored, "you'll me," and seizing the girl by the he wrenched her from the win-

Help!" she gasped as she fell on to f the seats and struggled to regain ooting.

Miss Aviss, for God's sake let me ex- ," entreated Mr Gloam seizing her s; but the horrible fear which was legible on his face made him a dreadful object to look at than be- while the violence he used to re- n the girl robbed her of all presence ind. Disengaging herself from she tottered toward the nearest and frantically turned the handle. st of cold night air flew to the car- , and a shower of sparks from the e was seen flying by. Mr. Gloam a grab at the girl to draw her back. She eluded him, and, screaming louder than ever, tried to step on the footboard. Then there was another faint shriek and all was silence. The door, swinging forward by the impetus of the train at a curve, closed of its own accord. The girl had slipped and was gone.

"Great God!" muttered Mr. Gloam when one awful minute had elapsed. He had taken off his hat and was stroking his forehead as he sat endeavoring to realize what had happened. He asked himself whether he was not in the midst of a nightmare. If our train had stopped at that minute he would have been unable to crawl out, and anybody who had seen him must have suspected him of a crime. During a quarter of an hour the poor wretch could neither stir nor think lucidly; he could only moan and tremble. What first recalled him to himself was the sight of the things which the poor girl—now dead, beyond doubt—had left in the carriage. There was a shawl, a traveling bag, a novel; and on the floor a small gold watch without a chain.

The sight of these articles stirred in the unwilling murderer the sense of self-preservation. He caught them up one by one and flung them out of the window into the dark, after which he crept on his knees and looked under the seats to see if anything else had been left. He found nothing. Pitiable as his agony of mind then was, he saw the necessity for composing himself, and sat down again trying to reflect. Had any of the passengers in other carriages heard the girl speak? Had any one seen her fall? If so, he was a lost man. He would be arrested at Birmingham, and in due time he would be hanged or sentenced to penal servitude for the better part of his life. How would his story be believed? And if it were believed how would it justify him? The public outcry against him would be all the greater, as he was a clergyman; and, now that he had thrown the girl's things out of the carriage in the first moment of his panic, the evidence of criminal intention would seem complete. "Why did I throw the things out?" faltered Mr. Gloam, speaking to himself; and then he groaned again: "My God, what shall I do?"

It was between Leamington and Birmingham that the girl had fallen out of the train. As the express neared Birmingham the tension on Jude Gloam's nerves was such as few men ever experience. Within five minutes he endured an amount of terror and anguish enough to spread over a lifetime; yet he had the craft to see that all his chances of escaping unsuspected might depend upon his behavior when the train stopped. He must alight quite coolly; he must not run, nor appear anxious to get away; he must control his terrors, though his heart throbbed to bursting.

The train glided into the station; the porters ran along the platform opening doors; one of them opened Mr. Gloam's carriage. "Any luggage, sir?"

"Yes, I have some luggage," said Mr. Gloam, and he stepped out, shaking in every limb, but apparently sedate and calm, as it behooves a clergyman to be. Next moment he was mixed up with the throng of people who were foraging for their trunks and portmanteaus.

Nobody paid any attention to him. No one talked about shrieks having been heard during the journey. The passengers all attended to their own business, and left him to his. Mr. Gloam's business was to collect a portmanteau, a box and a hamper; having done this, he turned to ask a porter to call a cab for him, but, as he was about to speak, his words froze on his tongue, for he saw standing beside him a girl who was the very image of Miss Aviss.

If the girl had looked at him she must have noticed his confusion, but she was glancing toward an elderly gentleman and lady who were walking toward her.

"Here's her box, papa, but I've not seen her pass," said the girl to the elderly couple.

"We have looked into every carriage," said the gentleman addressed as papa; "but she hasn't come. I suppose she missed the train."

"But how comes her box to be here?"

"Wasn't there a change of carriages somewhere between this and London?" suggested the elderly lady. "I think there's a change at Didcot. Perhaps she got out there and afterward entered the wrong train."

"How very provoking!" exclaimed the girl.

"I dare say we shall find a telegram when we get home," said the elderly gentleman; "but we must ask the stationmaster to take care of Mary's box when she comes to claim it."

Mr. Gloam had glanced at the box beside which the girl stood, and he saw on it a card with the name "Miss Mary Aviss." The miserable man shrank as the father, mother and sister of the poor girl with whom he had traveled passed him. Then he helped the porter to lift his portmanteau and walked with him to a cab. He had a six-mile drive before he could reach his parish of Rorleigh, which was on the outskirts of Birmingham. However, the drive was accomplished in safety, and that night was spent by Mr. Gloam, sleepless, in his new parsonage.

The body of Miss Aviss was found dead on the line early on the following day, and afterward her traveling-bag was discovered twenty miles further down the line. But for this discovery of the bag the poor girl's death would have been attributed to accident; as it was, when it became demonstrated that somebody must have had a share in her death, nobody accused the Rev. Jude Gloam. Nor was anybody else accused. The porter who had put Mr. Gloam into the carriage at Oxford had not noticed that there was a young lady in the compartment, and, simply owing to this slight fact of non-observance, the story of Mary Aviss' death was fated to remain a mystery.

It became known in time, however, to one man to whom Mr. Gloam communicated the facts in writing some five years after they had happened. He, the rector of Rorleigh, ended his letter by saying: "I have lived in a purgatory of remorse and sorrow ever since that awful night, and am thankful to think I shall soon be rid of my load." He was dying when he wrote this of a decline, brought on by overwork in his parish; and he left behind him the reputation of being the most earnest, zealous, kindest and also the saddest rector whom the people of Rorleigh had ever seen.

THE WHALEBONE TRADE.

The whale is the largest fish that swims in the sea and it is probably the most useful. It is, of course, captured for its oil, but there is a part of its body which commerce has made an extensive use of to the enrichment of many men. In the upper jaw of the whale are thin, parallel laminæ, varying in size from three to twelve feet in length. These are called whalebone, and all above six feet in length is called size bone, a quality which commands the highest price. Whalebone once brought a very high price, especially when hoopskirts were more in fashion than they are today. The Dutch formerly received $3,500 for a ton of whalebone, but since 1763 it has never brought anything like that price. In 1818 it brought $450 a ton, in 1834 from $530 to $545, and 1844 it varied from $1,080 for Southern to $1,550 for Northern bone. As the whale becomes scarce of course whalebone will rise in the market, and at present the Dutch and the Scotch whalers are doing a very poor business. The Americans also complain, and now that this is the case the inventive genius of man is trying hard to find the best whalebone. This is obtained from Greenland whale. From the mouth of one of these monsters from 2,000 to 3,000 pounds are often taken. The manufacture of whalebone into articles of use and ornament is not so extensive as one might imagine. It is principally confined to New York and Boston, four manufactories being in the former and three in the latter. When the raw whalebone is first received at the factory the hair is cut off the slabs. They are then soaked in water until they are soft, after which they are scraped of all the gum that adheres to them. They are next put in a steam box, where a workman straightens them with a knife; they are finally polished, and are then ready to be made use of for any purpose that the dresser may see fit. Whalebone is principally used nowadays in the manufacture of whips and corsets. Umbrella frames used to be made altogether of whalebone, but since its scarcity and high price steel is mostly used for this purpose. Whalebone hats and whalebone ribbon have just come into vogue. The former look very beautiful and are very comfortable on the head. Whales, like seals, do not get time to grow, for they are slaughtered mercilessly, young and old, in the pursuit of wealth. The old ones are often killed before the young are able to take care of themselves, and the result of this cruelty is a loss of thousands and thousands of whales and seals in a year. Mankind will have to be more thoughtful in the work of slaughter if it wishes to be better compensated by these animals, and the whale must be let alone for a few years if the ladies are to have fine corsets and the gentlemen fine walking-sticks and riding-whips.—Brooklyn Eagle.

FALLING STARS.

Astronomers divide meteors into several classes—aerial meteors, as winds, tornadoes, etc.; aqueous meteors, as fogs, rain, snow, hail, etc.; luminous meteors, or those due to the action of elements in the air, as rainbows, halos, parhelias, mirages, etc.; electrical meteors, as lightnings, auroras, etc.; and igneous meteors, as shooting or falling stars, star-showers, bolides or fire-balls, aerolites or meteorites, etc. In present usage, says Prof. Newton, the term meteor is generally limited to the last group, or to the igneous meteors. The meteorites are all evidently fragments, not separate formations. They are, says the same authority, in the heavens, to some extent at least, grouped in streams along the orbits of known comets, and hence have a common origin with them. The continuity of these streams, the double and multiple character of Biela's and other comets, and the steady diminution of comets in brilliancy at successive returns, seems to argue a continuous breaking up of the comet into fragments by some cause, probably by the sun's heat. This view is strengthened by the fact that the meteoric irons and stones bring with them carbonic acid, which is known to form so prominent a part of the comet's tail. It is now universally admitted that igneous meteors are caused by small bodies which have been traveling about the sun in their orbits, but now come into the earth's atmosphere, and, in general, burn up. The stony meteorites have in general the shape of broken fragments of stone. The outside is usually covered with a thin, black crust, which is evidently due to a melting of the surface in the atmosphere. There have been found at various times and places loose iron masses that are assumed to be of meteoric origin, because their peculiar form, their peculiar composition, and their peculiar crystalline structure are like those of the iron masses that have been seen in several instances to come down from meteors. Shooting stars are seen on any clear, moonlight night; they leave behind, many of them, a bright cloud of phosphorescent light; the meteors and their trains have various colors—white, green, blue, yellow, scarlet, etc.; the duration of the flight is generally less than a second of time, but the brighter ones may last several seconds; the meteorites contain no elements, so far as we know, which have not been found on the earth, but these elements are compounded differently from terrestrial minerals; sometimes they reach the earth, and again are consumed in their course.

LEGAL DEFINITION OF A "NEWSPAPER."

Newspapers—says the Supreme Court of Minnesota in a recent case—are of so many varieties that it would be next to impossible to give any brief definition which would include and describe all kinds of newspapers. We are not called upon to incur the risk of giving any such definition at this time. It will be sufficient for all the purposes of this case to say that, in the ordinary understanding of the word, a newspaper is a publication which usually contains, among other things, what is called the general news, the current news, or the news of the day; and nothing which does not usually contain such news, and is intended for general circulation, is a newspaper in the ordinary sense of the word. Such a newspaper is a publication adapted to the general reader. Now, in the absence of some controlling consideration to the contrary, the statute is to be taken to have used the word newpaper in this, its ordinary sense, or "according to the common or approved usage of the language;" and when the object of the publication of a summons is considered, the reasonableness of such a construction of the word newspaper as requires the publication to be made where it will be likely to meet the eye of the general reader is quite apparent.

PRESIDENTS THAT HAVE DIED IN OFFICE.

All the Presidents who have died in office have died in the early part of the term. Gen. Taylor lived sixteen months after the inauguration, leaving two-thirds of the term to be filled by Mr. Fillmore. Abraham Lincoln was assassinated one month and eleven days after his second inauguration, and Andrew Johnson therefore held the office three years, ten months and a half. Gen. Harrison's term of power was the briefest of all. He died just one month after his inauguration day; Tyler was three years, eleven months in office. Gen. Garfield was President only six months and fifteen days.

BRAIN DEVELOPMENT.

It is not surprising to find the unlearned in things medical unable to understand that brain development, which of course is generally a matter of heredity, determines character. Such, however, is, and must needs be, the fact. Whether the mind is something outside matter which acts through or by the brain, as a musician may use a musical instrument, or whether, as some think, what we call mind is simply brain function, it should be manifested on consideration that upon the quality and conformation of a man's brain must depend his mental capacity; and, consequently, also his characteristics both intellectual and moral. We are not disposed to urge specialities of development as excuses for conduct because, given an average degree of intelligence and fairly strong will power, the individual is clearly responsible for his actions; but it must not be forgotten that his instincts of right or wrong, and the facility of judgment with which he distinguishes between good and evil, will be acute or dull in proportion as his brain is developed.

The mind is in a large sense the character of a man, and as directly dependent on the physical growth of his brain as the speed of a race-horse is dependent on its muscular development. This is not sufficiently recognized, and because it is not we every now and then find silly remarks in print such as the following: "The convolutions of the brain may have something to do with the difference between mediocrity and genius, but at present they are not recognized in the law courts, and it is difficult to see how they can be;" with such weak and wide moral reflections as that "It would be scarcely satisfactory to a pickpocket to have his brains (sic) examined, in order to prove to those he left behind that he really could not help being a thief!" And yet the facts are sufficiently plain and simple, so plain and simple that any one should be able to understand them.—Lancet.

GARFIELD AS A FRIEND.

The world likes to hear of the personality of its heroes—their habits, tastes, peculiarities, likes and dislikes. I may be pardoned, therefore, for speaking of things in connection with the dead President, which would be of trifling interest, if not an impertinence, if said of one not widely loved and honored. Gen. Garfield had a warm, affectionate nature. The people he liked were very dear to him. He took them to his heart and gave them his full confidence. He would often sit down beside a friend and throw his arm over his neck, or put his hand on his shoulder or knee, as the natural expression of his liking, or in walking would place his arm through that of the friend. He had a way of calling an intimate friend or comrade "old boy" or "old fellow," and once, when Col. Rockwell thanked him for some kindness, he said, putting his hand on his friend's shoulder, "Old boy! the ties of friendship are sometimes stronger than those of blood!" By the courtesy of Col. Rockwell I am also enabled to include here one of Gen. Garfield's most characteristic letters. Col. Rockwell says:

"On the Sunday preceding the election I had sent him a little expression of my confidence in his success, closing, as I remember, with the stanza from Goethe:

"The future hides in it
Gladness and sorrow.
We press still thorow;
Naught abides in it·
Daunting us—onward!

"To this, on the eve of election, he sent the following reply:

"MENTOR, Ohio, Nov. 1, 1880.

"DEAR JARVIS: The evening mail brings me your letter of the 31st, and I take a moment, in the lull before the battle, to say how greatly glad I am for all the earnest and effective things you have done for me. Whatever may be the issue to-morrow, I shall carry with me, through life, most grateful memories of the enthusiastic and noble work my friends have done, and especially my college classmates. The campaign has been fruitful to me in the discipline that comes from endurance and patience. I hope that defeat will not sour me, nor success disturb the poise which I have sought to gain by the experiences of life.

"From this edge of the conflict I give you my hand and heart, as in all the other days of our friendship. As ever yours,

"J. A. GARFIELD.

A LEGEND OF THE NORSELAND.

It is a beautiful legend of the Norseland. Amilias was the village blacksmith, and under the spreading chestnut treekin his village smithophiken stood. He the hot iron gehammered and sjhod horses for 50 cents all round please. He made tin hjelmets for the gjodds and stove-pipe trousers for the hjeroes.

Mimir was a rival blacksmith. He didn't go in very much for defensive armor, but he was lightning on two-legged bjswords, and cut and slash svrculassssses. He made cheese knives for the other gjodds, and he made the great Ejsvsstusen, an Arkansas tooth-pick that would make a free incision clear into the transvere semi-colon of a cast-iron ichthyosaurus, and never turn its edge. That was the kind of a bhjairpin Mimir said he was.

One day Amilias made an impenetrable suit of armor for a second-class gjodd, and put it on himself to test it, and boastfully inserted a card in the Svenssfka Norderbfraviskjkanaheldesplvtdenskgorodovusaken, saying that he was wearing a suit of home-made, best-chilled, Norway merino underwear that would knick the unnumbered saw-teeth in the pot-metal cutlery of the iron-mongery over the way. That, Amilias remarked to his friend Bjohun Bjrobinsson, was the kind of a Bdjucckk he was.

When Mimir spelled out the card next morning, he said, "Bjjj!" and went to work with a charcoal-furnace cold anvil, and A. T. Hay's isomorphic process, and in a little while he came down street with a sjvazard that glittered like a dollar-store diamond, and met Amilias down by the new opera-house. Amilias buttoned on his new bjarmor, and said:

"If you have no hereafter use for your old chyjcese-kjnife, strike!"

Mimir spat on his hands, whirled his skjvaard above his head, and fetched Amilias a swipe that seemed to miss everything except the empty air through which it softly whistled. Amilias smiled, and said, "Go on," adding that it "seemed to him that he felt a general sense of cold iron somewhere in the neighborhood, but he hadn't been hit."

"Shake yourself," said Mimir.

Amilias shook himself and immediately fell into halves, the most neatly-divided man that ever went beside himself.

"That's where the boiler-maker was away off in his diagnosis," said Mimir, as he went back to his shop to put up the price of cutlery 65 per cent. in all lines, with an unlimited advance on special orders.

Thus do we learn that a good action is never thrown away, and that kind words and patient love will overcome the hardest natures.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

THE bindings of books in galleries perish from heat, and the higher the books are above the floor the more active is this destructive agency. Leather is an animal tissue, and will not, like linen, cotton, paper and other vegetable substances, sustain without injury a higher temperature than we find agreeable to live in. Books cannot live where men cannot live. They are more nearly allied to us as congeners than we are wont to suppose. In excessive heat the leather of bindings slowly consumes and its life departs. The sulphurous residium of gas combustion is also said to be injurious to bindings. Books should, therefore, be shelved in the coolest par of the room, and where the air is never likely to be overheated, which is near the floor, where we ourselves live and move. In the private libraries of our residences a mistake is often made in carrying the shelving of our book-cases so high that they enter the upper and overheated stratum of air. If any one be skeptical on this point, let him test, by means of a step-ladder, the condition of the air near the ceiling of his common sitting-room on a winter evening, when the gas is burning freely. The heat is simply insufferable.

SAYS "Gath:" "The New York dailies are set up in the midst of such tremendous influences that they are circumspect and cautious. Their power is so great, and the enterprises pressing for recognition and aid are so rich and numerous, that there is suspicious criticism of every piece of news offered. Then, too, many of the papers are under partisan or special control, and must cut their work out to suit a dictation that is unjournalistic, and usually unwise. The Western papers want the news undiluted, and care little or nothing who it hurts or helps, so it pleases the public."

The three negroes charged with the murder of Mr. Weisinger, of Marion Junction, some two months ago, have been tried, found guilty, and two of them sentenced to be hanged, and the other to the penitentiary for life.

We are again called upon to chronicle another terrible crime. It is the horrible murder and and burning of the house of Mrs. Chas. Tankersly, at Gnatville, Cherokee county, Alabama. Robbery seems to have been the object of the perpetrators of the deed. Two nephews of the lady have been arrested upon suspicion of having committed the crime.

We see that Congress has lately been petitioned by a number of Tuskaloosa's public spirited citizens for an appropriation to aid in the construction of locks and dams at the University Falls of the Warrior river. The petition, though it is in the interest of an important public work; will, we fear, go unheeded. Congress is too much occupied in providing for the wants of such political tramps as Grant, and listening to the harangues of such æsthetic angels as Oscar Wilde to pay much attention to "small matters."

THE NEXT GOVERNOR.

"If Tuskaloosa county could name the next Governor of Alabama, Hon. A. C. Hargrove would go in "by a large majority;" but this eminent gentleman has thus far given the public no intimation that he will enter the race. It is no secret that he is being urged by his friends all over the State to permit his name to go before the next Democratic Convention; but even his warmest admirers here say that they do not know what are his intentions."

Thus writes the Tuskaloosa correspondent of the Mobile Chronicle. And though we are satisfied that Col. Hargrove has never sought the office, and will never think of such a thing as announcing himself a candidate, yet we think this the very reason why he should have the nomination, since he is, in every way, so eminently fitted for the position. He has repeatedly given up a lucrative law practice for the purpose of serving the counties of Bibb and Tuskaloosa in the State Senate. He has never sought an office, and should his friends wait until he does, they are more than likely to be disappointed. Let the people make him their next Governor, and they can feel assured that honor will be bestowed where honor is due. Courageous as a soldier, and a statesman among his people, Col. Hargrove would grace any position he may be called upon to fill.

SCIENCE PERSECUTED.

If Giteau had lived in ancient times he would undoubtedly have been a member of the Abdals.— These were Persian fanatics, who deemed it a merit to kill any one of a different religion, and if slain in the attempt were accounted Martyrs.

Giteau a "stalwart of the stalwarts" killed Garfield of the opposite faction of his party, claiming that he was "doing the Lord's service," as a divinely inspired agent of the Deity, and if now he is executed, it will no doubt be his dying request that he may be remembered as a martyr.

This case from the beginning to the end of the trial has been a most stupendous farce. Science has not only been ignored but absolutely persecuted. What a wide field for scientific investigation or research was presented in the theory of the defense which Giteau wanted to make, but which was totally smothered by an outside pressure or else was compromised with a hope presented of obtaining stronger testimony for the defense on the plea of insanity.

What an opportunity there was for the presentation of the advanced ideas of modern science on the subject of insanity, and the truth developed in the light of new discoveries or developments. Yet any such scientist as the late Prof. Henry who might have dared to advance new theories which might have been in conflict with standard authorities of the past, or an innovation on the accustomed modes of thinking, would have been most heartlessly criticised if not hooted from the stand. Scientific inquiry was utterly lost sight of both by the prosecution and the defence in this case; by the prosecution because the sole object was to convince the jury by any and every means; and by the defence, because the government refused to grant the requisite pecuniary aid.

Only a favored few can keep pace with the developments of science, and they are often decried and persecuted. Galileo was imprisoned by the Inquisition, for maintaining that the earth moved. In order to get his liberty he "abjured the heresy," but as he went his way, whispered half audibly (but nevertheless it does move). Gerbert, who introduced Algebra into Christendom, was accused of dealing in the "black arts," and shunned as a magician. Dr. Faust, the German Philosopher, suffered in a similar way, in the sixteenth century, and was imprisoned in Paris for magic, on account of his knowledge of printing. In our own country, Morse of electric telegraph fame was ridiculed by Congress.

But we need not enumerate the long list of instances where science has been persecuted. Suffice it to say that no scientist of modern ideas of metaphysics appeared in the Giteau trial; and why he will have meted to him the penalty of the law may be explained in what we propose as his epitaph:

Here lies the man, Charles J. Giteau;
He played for game, high jack and low,
But game he lost by dint of his tongue
As long as the rope by which he was hung.

SINGULAR PHENOMENON.

DEATH AND RESURRECTION OF A MAN —HIS BLISSFUL EXPERIENCE IN THE OTHER WORLD—A SECOND TIME HE DIES.

A special dispatch from Hagerstown, Md., gives the particulars of singular psychological phenomenon which has been made public by the Rev. J. Spangles Keifer, of the Reformed Church. The story of the minister is, that one night about a week ago, he was summoned to the bedside of a dying man named Torrent. To his great regret, when he reached the house, a mile distant from the town, in the mountains, he was informed by the attending physician that the man was dead. He went to the room, and saw lying on the bed the stark and rigid form of the departed, the ashy pallor of death on the face, and the body cold. It was about nine o'clock in the evening when the minister arrived.— The family were terribly grief-stricken. A son, in particular was inconsolable. He called on his father, begged him to come back, and with difficulty could be kept away from the body. The clergyman remained until near two o'clock in the morning. At this time, when the pastor was thinking of leaving, the son who seemed to take the death so much to heart, was seized with another paroxysm of grief, threw himself on the body of his father, embraced him, called him, bathed the cold face with tears, shrieking that he could not let him go; that he must say one word, look at him just once more; that he must not leave him without one more word and one more look. As if the agonized voice had penetrated the silence of the other world, the lips of the father moved, the eyes opened and cast a sad, reproachful look on the weeping son, and in the well known voice came distinctly these words: "Oh! why did you call me back?" As soon as the awe-stricken group could regain their presence of mind after this appalling scene, they immediately administered restoratives to the patient, when the minister left him very weak but still alive. He was sent for by the father the next day, who gave him an account of his death (as he evidently believed it had been), and his experience to the time when he was apparently recalled to life. He said:

"When I died I first felt a sinking sensation. I knew everything going on in the room, but I could not speak or move my lips. Then all was blank. The next thing I remembered was being in a dense darkness, seemingly in a tunnel, through which I was being pushed. There seemed to be two forms, one on each side, pushing me along through the tunnel, and I appeared to move as if I was floating, touching nothing above or below. At last it appeared to get lighter as though we were nearing the end of the passage. It grew brighter every moment, and then I seemed to observe two shining, beautiful forms on each side of me. I had a feeling of peace and well-being, and heard, as though it were a part of the place I floated in, the most soothing and delightful music. I have been a great sufferer, and the feeling of rest and freedom from pain was the thing I noticed most in my new state. I remained a short time in this blessed state, when it seemed to be disturbed by a voice in pain calling me to come back. If they had known how much better off I was, they would never have wanted me back in this weak and suffering body."

The man lived several days and then died, as his family sincerely believe, a second time, and remembering his solemn words as to his first experience, did not call him back. Whether the man was in a syncope, from which the piercing lamentations of the family aroused him, or whether he had indeed been permitted to return after a glance at the glories of the great unknown, none can answer. But one thing is certain: that for the space of several hours, to all intents and purposes, so far as the doctor, the pastor and the family were concerned, and so far as all outward indications went, the man was dead.

An exchange makes this very sensible suggestion:

"In all towns where a newspaper is published, every business man should advertise in it, even if it is nothing more than a card stating his name and the business he is engaged in. It helps sustain the paper and lets the people at a distanse know that the town is full of business men. The paper finds its way into thousands of places which hand bills will never reach. A card in a paper is a traveling signboard, and can be seen by every reader. Think of this and let your light shine."

Chancery court convenes on Friday, the 27th inst.

Several literary contributions received are too lengthy for publication.

Miss McLemore, a beautiful young lady of Montgomery, is visiting friends in Clanton.

Maull & Hockinsmith have a fine stock of goods and invite the public to call and examine.

Several residences are being built at Verbena, and each one has been rented for the next year.

We are under obligations to our distinguished representative in Congress, Hon. Thos. Williams, for interesting public documents.

The continuous rains during the past two weeks have greatly retarded farm and garden work.—Creeks throughout the county are filled to overflowing.

The Shelby Sentinel very truthfully says: This country is overrun with stores. Probably if some of us would go to work in the field and make more corn, wheat, oats, and less cotton, times would be better.

We hear of several who will visit Mobile next week to witness Mardi Gras celebration, which takes place Tuesday. Round trip tickets will be sold from Clanton to Mobile at $9.20, and to New Orleans, $14.50. Said tickets to be good from February 20th to March 1st.

A freight train on the S. & N. road ran off the track about one mile north of Elmore, on Wednesday morning. Six cars were ditched. No one hurt. The wreck train passed down early Wednesday morning and we suppose trains are now running through alright.

An unfortunate editor, has prepared a catalogue of the plagues daily visited upon him—plagues well nigh as terrible as those called down by the Jewish leader in the olden time upon the devoted land of Egypt. These dire woes are seven in number as follows: Exchange fiends, bores armed with prosy communications, poets, cranks, book-canvassers, insurance agents and the man who kindly volunteers to tell the editor how to run his paper.

The ball last Tuesday evening was a great success. The young men of Clanton know how to "run the machinery," and with Prof. Hall and Dr. Lanier as masters of ceremonies such entertainments are always doubly successful. A large number of visitors in attendance. Cooper's, Verbena, Montgomery and other points were well represented.

Mr. James Harris writes us that the statement of our Jemison correspondent was incorrect in regard to his (Harris) being present in the store of Finch for the purpose of assisting in carrying off the goods. Mr. Harris states that he was sent for by Finch to make known the cost of certain goods that were not marked, and after the guard was placed around the store, he could not leave. Mr. Harris had been clerking in the store. We have further learned that the entire stock of goods has been purchased by Mr. J. O. Smith, and that Finch has returned to Georgia. It is stated that in 1875, the man going by the name of Charles Jones, but whose real name is Finch, killed two men in Florida, in a political row. He at once left that locality and finally settled at Jemison. His location being discovered, his brother came to Jemison and closed up the business, and the former left at once in search of cooler quarters. We hope to be able to give fuller particulars next week in regard to the killing.

WHAT MRS. GRUNDY SAYS:

That it would be a paying investment for some one to build a few neat residences in Clanton for rent.

That the ladies looked lovely at the ball Tuesday evening.

That our young people should organize a literary society for intellectual improvement.

That farmers had better raise home supplies this year, unless they wish to feel the pinch of poverty and debt next winter.

That Clanton has the best looking depot agent on the line of the L. & N. railroad, and that he isn't cross-eyed either.

That many a sigh is heard in Clanton over "departed spirits."

That red-headed lawyers are always full of fire and easy to "go off."

That the editor of the VIEW goes to Verbena very often, and doesn't go to see the boys either.

That visitors will find Clanton a pleasant resort next summer, and that those who don't stop here instead of going to Blount or Saratoga, will die sadder and worse.

That everybody should subscribe for the VIEW, pay for it in advance, and be forever happy.

MAPLESVILLE DOTS.

Rain enough this week to overflow creeks and wash roads badly.

The disciples of John Barleycorn are complaining of the scarcity of their favorite beverage.

A black deer was seen by Mr. Gus Atchinson several days ago.

The average Maplesvillian is getting demoralized. Not a sermon preached here in six months.

James Walker, overseer of the Curry road, complains of the inability of overseers to make road hands do their duty. Our Justices need a little more moral courage to enforce the road laws and until that is done, we may look in vain for any improvement in our roads.

BIJOU.

Mr. W. H. Foshee, circuit clerk of Chilton county, Ala., is in town, the guest of Mr. W. K. Kenan. Mr. Foshee is perhaps the crack shot of the State with shot-gun or rifle, being able to hit a half dollar, flung into the air, eight times out of ten, with the latter weapon. He hunted with one team of the Union Springs Gun Club last fall and made many friends here by his cordial and gentlemanly bearing.

Union Springs Herald.

The West Alabamian nominates Capt. S. F. Nunnelee, of the Tuskaloosa Gazette, for Secretary of State, which we heartily endorse. Should he consent to become a candidate, he may expect a good support in East Alabama.

The above from the Tuskegee News proves that the claims of the Gazette veteran will not be overlooked in this section of the State.

The girl pressed the leaves, and the boy pressed the girl. The press is mighty and must prevail.

The damage by high water in Pickens county will exceed $25,000.

MAN TOO GOOD.

You would hardly judge it to be true, from your experience with nature, but it is a solemn and awful fact that some men are altogether too good. What there is in the Bible which teaches a man that he can become absolutely perfect, we have never been able to discover; but there are persons, and of both genders, who are at once impudent and conceited enough to say in a prayer meeting that they have committed no sin for ten or fifteen years. Of course, every man tells his wife some times that she is an angel, but, then, everybody knows that it is only a figure of speech, a line of poetry, a figment of the imagination, and not a literal fact. But for a man who is in any business by which he manufactures a competency, and especially for a man who is a kind of religious tramp, with no visible means of support, to set himself up as a consecrated pattern for the rest of mankind, and to maunder about his spiritual cleanliness when every one knows that he is not over clean physically, is enough to give one an incurable religious nausea. A maniac of this ilk received a rebuke the other day which ought to last his whole life time. He told the congregation that for nearly a score of years he had lived without sin, and then volunteered the information that he had just "married a daughter of the lord." A decidedly worldly man who was acquainted with the self elected saint and who seemed to remember some transactions which could not be properly classified under the head of sinless, was carnally wroth at the pretentiousness of the fellow, and said, loud enough to be heard: "Well, all I can say is, that if you have married a daughter of the Lord, you will never see your father in law."

N. Y. Herald.

When the King of Italy lately visited Naples nine protestant ministers asked and were granted an interview. The King seemed surprised when one was presented to him as a Wesleyan Methodist, another as a Baptist, the third as a Presbyterian, the fourth as a Waldense, and so on. "I do not understand" said King Humbert, "how you can all be ministers of the same Gospel and yet have so many distinctions. Perhaps one of you will be so good as to explain to me." One of the number promptly replied: "In your majesty's army there are many regiments wearing different uniforms, and called by different names; nevertheless they are all under one commander-in-chief and follow one flag. In like manner we protestants are divided into several denominations, but we know only one chief—Jesus Christ—and we follow but one banner, namely, that of the Gospel of our crucified and risen Lord." It is said that the King listened attentively, and, thanking the speaker for his clear explanation, said: "You wish me to understand that while there are differences among you on minor matters, there is unity in all that is essential." The protestant ministers, thanking the King for his courtesy, then withdrew.

GUITEAU.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 11.—Charley Reed, of Chicago, who made an able defense in assisting Scoville during the Giteau trial, to-day paid a visit to the assassin at the jail. He did not find him despondent by any means. Guiteau was cheerful and was proud of his new suit of clothes, which, he said was bought from money earned by himself. "I paid for these clothes he said, out of the proceeds of autographic writing and the sale of my photographs. I am getting fat." That is true; the wretch has gained perceptibly in flesh since the trial ended. Reed said to him: "Do you feel any fear as to the result?" "No," was the reply in a very emphatic tone. "Well, I should, most undoubtedly," said Reed, "if I were in your position." To this Guiteau quickly responded: "But, you see, you do not stand as well with the Lord as I do."

THE LENIENCY OF THE COURT.

In the pioneer days of Michigan one John Weeks was arrested in a town in Washtenaw county for stealing six sheep, and when the trial came off before a Justice the respective lawyers made the usual statements of what they expected to prove and disprove. After the lawyer for the prosecution had finished, the defense arose and began:

"May it please the court, we expected to prove by John Day that my client was in Ohio at the time these sheep were stolen, but unfortunately for us the witness is in bed with the mumps. We expected to prove by Homer Rice that the plaintiff here never had any sheep stolen, but Homer has been called to Buffalo to see his mother die. We further expected to prove by Abraham White that the plaintiff never owned any live stock, except a yearling calf and two old geese, but Abraham is in jail in Detroit for drunkenness. Lastly, your Honor, we were prepared to and expected to prove by Charles Smith, the undertaker, that instead of the plaintiff losing six sheep he has lately mysteriously acquired seven hogs and a guinea-hen. I repeat that we were prepared to prove this, but Providence has willed otherwise. Mr. Smith has been called to Grand Rapids to convict his uncle of body-snatching, and we are thus stripped of our defense. In this emergency we throw ourselves upon the well-known leniency of this honorable court, trusting that he will not shut his eyes to the wonderful dispensations of Providence that have left my client disarmed and unprepared."

The prisoner was bound over, and got a sentence of two years.—Detroit Free Press.

PRUDENCE.

A new boarder gazed fixedly at his plate, and then said:

"Is there a reliable physician stopping at this house?"

"Yessir," said the waiter.

"Good surgeon, too, eh?"

"Believe so, sir."

"Then just see if he is in his room before I start on this breakfast. I had a brother choked to death on a steak like that once, and I'm bound to take all the necessary precautions."

SIXTY-FIVE is the number which a horse near New Brunswick, N. J., can count. His duties for years have consisted of carting sixty-five loads of clay from a pit to the brickyard where it is mixed or ground, and then go for a load of coal dust. Now, without anything being said or done to indicate the fact to him, when he has deposited his sixty-fifth load, he turns away from the clay pit and goes to the dock for a load of the dust.

WHAT GOES OVER THE WIRES.

Among other interesting facts, a telegrapher relates the following:

Hebrews, as a class, use the telegraph for social purposes more largely than any other people. It is a common thing for us to send out telegraphic announcements of a betrothal, and get a flood of congratulatory telegrams in reply. Telegraphic birthday congratulations are also of frequent occurrence, and the Purim festival also brings out a crop of telegrams between friends and relatives. Sometimes a message will simply read: "I drink your health." We get such even for cable transmission. The use of the telegraph for social purposes has become very large, however, among people generally. It constitutes about 20 per cent. of our domestic business, and about 7 per cent. of our cable business. Most of our half-rate night messages are of that character. "How is Ida this morning?" a man will ask his relative in some other city. Every day telegraphic queries of a similar nature go across the ocean. The telegraph brings people into one community, and, aside from the expense, there is no more trouble in making such inquiries than in sending around to a neighbor's house to see how a sick friend is getting along. Sometimes a man visiting here on business will send a short letter to his wife by telegraph every night. Want of form and ceremony is excusable in telegraphic messages, and busy men to whom the expense is no consideration are getting more and more in the habit of preferring the telegraph to mails, even when there is no necessity in the world for such expedition. Fellows who come to town on larks sometimes can't wait till they get home to tell their comrades of the good times they are having. Their messages have a high flavor at times, but we rarely make any objections. Even profanity goes by wire sometimes.

FRENCH DUELS.

Sainte-Beuve, the eminent critic, was once engaged in a duel. While the preliminaries were being arranged, it began to rain slightly, and the author of "Volupte," who had prudently brought his umbrella with him, held it over his head with one hand, while he firmly grasped his sword with the other. This proceeding being objected to by the seconds as irregular, he coolly replied that it was quite sufficient for him to risk his life without running the chance of catching cold into the bargain.

He however did not lack courage, which is more than can be said of one of his colleagues, who, finding himself under the necessity of accepting a challenge, only consented to do so on being confidentially informed by his second that in the present case the duel was merely a matter of form, and that his adversary would take care not to hit him. Somewhat comforted by this assurance, he repaired to the scene of action, and the distance—twenty-five paces—having been duly measured, boldly faced his opponent, who, on the signal being given, blazed away, and neatly perforated the critic's hat just half an inch above the head.

"Confound it!" he exclaimed to his second, who was congratulating him on his gallant bearing. "Why didn't you tell me that he was going to spoil my new hat? I would have put on an old one."

A NEW WAY TO RAISE SETTER DOGS.

A citizen of our community has a fine litter of setter dogs. He has been taking special pains to give them a good start in the world, and to this end it was his custom to rise from his bed at short intervals to feed them. It became rather tedious business for him to "crawl out" during the cold winter nights to attend to their wants, so he tried a new plan. Setting a pan of milk in a warm corner behind the stove, he went to bed, and, in the small hours, the young canines called for food. Thinking to make a good job of it, he arose in the dark and carried the pan carefully to the wood-house, when, seizing each pup by the nape of the neck, he thrust its nose into the pan, and, when all had "got to their work," returned to his bed. The next morning he was aroused by his wife, who wanted to know what in the world he had done with her bread-pan. Investigation followed; his wife wet up a batch of bread and set it behind the stove to rise; this pan our "shot" had carried to the pups, and they, after gorging themselves with the dough, waddled back to their warm nest. The yeast was good and the puppies rose, looking like so many muffs with the head of the animal used for trimming, while their legs and tails resembled warts on an early-rose potato.—Henderson (Ky.) Tobacconist.

A PERSON was repeating before a friend the old maxim, "Who pays his debts enriches himself." "Bah!" replied the friend, "that is an idle rumor which creditors are endeavoring to circulate!"

WE HAVE heard both Democrats and Republicans say that there is nothing better for a Cough than Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup; this old reliable remedy never fails to cure a Cough or Cold at once, and may be obtained at any drug store for 25 cents a bottle.

THE sassiest man I ever met is a henpecked husband when he is away from home.——Nature seldom makes a phool; she simply furnishes the raw materials and lets the fellow finish the job to suit himself.—Josh Billings.

He Did Not Mince Matters.

A representative of the Lynn (Mass.), Item, in a late ramble throughout that city, gathered, among other scraps of interest and information the following: The first place visited by the reporter was the fruit store of Mr. J. Levett, No. 67 Market street, in response to a rumor that the proprietor had been cured of the rheumatism by the great remedy. Mr. Leavett not being in, the reporter had a talk with his son. Mr. Levett stated that his father had been cured of an exceedingly bad attack of rheumatism by the St. Jacobs Oil. He had the disease in his right arm and shoulder, which became perfectly helpless after being affected a few hours. His pain was so great that he could not rest in comfort or attend to business with any degree of satisfaction. After enduring this sort of thing for some time, he purchased a bottle of the Great German Remedy and began to apply it. He did not mince matters at all, but just used the Oil for all it was worth. After pursuing this mode of treatment for three days the pain was banished and his father was in a perfectly healthy condition. He has never since felt any rheumatism.

A PENNSYLVANIA woman, who leaped upward to hang an article of clothing upon a hook in the ceiling of her kitchen, caught a ring on one of her fingers in the hook and hung there, her feet not touching the ground. Her cries brought assistance, and she was released, painfully wrenched but not seriously harmed.

HORACE B. DICK, ESQ., associate editor of the Delaware Co. Republican, Chester, Pa., was cured by St. Jacobs Oil of very severe injuries resulting from a fall. His arm appeared to be paralyzed, but the Oil cured him.—Philadelphia Ledger.

CONSUMPTION is a disease we all dread. It often carries its victim to an untimely grave. How important, then, for those who cherish life and health, to prevent that disease in its early stages. Every Cold or Cough should be treated with ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM. There is no better remedy.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: "In the fall of 1876 I was taken with BLEEDING OF THE LUNGS, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as a half dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with Diseased Lungs will take DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I can positively say it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness."

A GOOD FAMILY REMEDY!
STRICTLY PURE.
HARMLESS TO THE MOST DELICATE.

By its faithful use CONSUMPTION HAS BEEN CURED when other Remedies and Physicians have failed to effect a cure.

JEREMIAH WRIGHT, of Marion County, W. Va., writes us that his wife had PULMONARY CONSUMPTION, and was pronounced INCURABLE by their physician, when the use of Allen's Lung Balsam ENTIRELY CURED HER. He writes that he and his neighbors think it the best medicine in the world.

WM. C. DIGGES, Merchant, of Bowling Green, Va., writes, April 4th, 1881, that he wants us to know that the LUNG BALSAM HAS CURED HIS MOTHER OF CONSUMPTION, after the physician had given her up as incurable. He says others knowing her case have taken the Balsam and been cured; he thinks all so afflicted should give it a trial.

DR. MEREDITH, Dentist, of Cincinnati, was thought to be in the last STAGES OF CONSUMPTION and was induced by his friends to try Allen's Lung Balsam after the formula was shown him. We have his letter that it at once cured his cough and that he was able to resume his practice.

WM. A. GRAHAM & CO., Wholesale Druggists, Zanesville, Ohio, writes us of the cure of Mathias Freeman, a well-known citizen, who had been afflicted with BRONCHITIS in its worst form for twelve years. The Lung Balsam cured him, as it has many others of BRONCHITIS.

A CRABBED CREATURE.

That nature cares for and entertains her own has become an established fact to all observers. Who does not love the sound of the brightly scintillating waves leaping from the phosphorescent sea, as they break against the rocks in the summer night until Nature herself, weary of the operation, turns the sounding surf towards the opposite shore, leaving stranded some badly-mutilated snail, which wanders solemnly on, Bohemian fashion—with all its worldly store upon its back. On the same beach may be found our crustacean edible—the crab—whose chief apology for existing at all seems to be its ability to furnish a delectable meal to fortunate bipeds. The crab being covered with a hard, impenetrable shell, it is not easy to molest or make him afraid; therefore he wages war in his watery world unceasingly when once attacked. Although tiny, he cannot be said to be devoid of understanding, having ten legs to assist his locomotion; this, however, avails him little, for, when conquered, he never turns his back to his enemy, starting into a bold run, but, like many politicians during election time, slips off sideways. There comes a time in the life of this pugnacious fellow when the years bring him more bone and muscle than he can dispose of with comfort, and he finds himself in a very tight place; his shoes pinch him and he begins to realize the practicability of applying to Dame Nature for more room or a house in proportion to his increasing size. Nature slowly responds to the call; but in her own good time provides a new home, so that the enterprising little creature does not wander about homeless, but is provided for suitably, as was the old sailor, who dropped his rheumatism and crabbedness when he applied the Great German Remedy, ST. JACOBS OIL. This last, however, may sound rather fishy to the skeptical reader, and to such we would reply in language too plain to be misunderstood—in words illustrating facts that even the waves of time cannot wash away or scaly epithets affect. ST. JACOBS OIL to-day has rendered the lives and homes of myriads of sufferers brighter than ever the electric light can, which people pause to admire along the way. Still more happily served than the old sailor was an invalid, who wrote thus concerning his case:

"CROOKED HAERTEL."

Accept a thousand thanks for that "golden remedy." I suffered for many years with rheumatic pain in my limbs. My legs were drawn together, and people called me "Crooked Haertel." I used ST. JACOBS OIL and was cured, and now feel so well that I think I could dance, as in my young days. JOHN HAERTEL, Fremont, Ill.

DR. HARTER'S

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of Iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other Iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy has in my hands made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians, have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any Iron preparation ever made. In short, it is as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC [illegible]

HAPPINESS.

"What didst thou say to Happiness?
I saw her at thy gate."
"This I said to Happiness,
'Thou comest all too late;
Nay! I cannot let thee in,
Where these graves are growing green.

"Is't meet, thou thyself shall say,
That where my dead repose
Thou shouldst hold thy revels gay,
Thou shouldst wear the rose?
Nay! I will not let thee in,
Where these graves are growing green.'

"Turned she round a little space,
Smiled and softly said,
'I would even ask a place,
There above thy head,
To plant flowers, myrtle and rose,
Making fair their last repose.'

"So she entrance gained at last;
How could I gainsay
Such request? My tears fell fast,
But she won her way;
And the rare, upspringing flowers
Wreathed to glorious summer bowers.

"She has won my grief from me,
Wherefore, then, complain?
Made my place of graves to be
Bright with hope again,
And, obeying each behest,
Joyfully I serve my guest."

HOW TWO LEARNED A LESSON.

Betty sighed. Now why she should have sighed at this particular moment no one on earth could tell. And it was all the more exasperating because John had just generously put into her little, shapely hand a brand-new $10 bill. And here began the trouble.

"What's the matter?" he said, his face falling at the faint sound, and his mouth clapping together in what those who knew him but little called an "obstinate pucker." "Now, what is it?"

Betty, who had just begun to change the sigh into a merry little laugh rippling all over the corners of the red lips, stopped suddenly, tossed her head and, with a small jerk noway conciliating, sent out the words:

"You needn't insinuate, John, that I'm always troublesome!"

"I didn't insinuate—who's talking of insinuating?" cried he, thoroughly incensed at the very idea, and, backing away a few steps, he glared down from his tremendous height in extreme irritation. "It's you yourself that's forever insinuating and all that, and then for you to put it on me—it's really abominable!"

The voice was harsh, and the eyes that looked down into hers were not pleasant to behold.

"And if you think, John Peabody, that I'll stand and have such things said to me, you miss your guess—that's all!" cried Betty, with two big red spots coming in her cheeks as she tried to draw her little erect figure up to its utmost dimensions. "Forever insinuating! I guess you wouldn't have said that before I married you. Oh, now you can, of course!"

"Didn't you say it first, I'd like to know?" cried John in great excitement, drawing nearer to the small creature he called "wife," who was gazing at him with blazing eyes of indignation; "I can't endure everything!"

"And if you bear more than I do," cried Betty, wholly beyond control now, "why, then I'll give up," and she gave a bitter little laugh and tossed her head again.

And here they were in the midst of a quarrel! These two who, but a year before, had promised to love and protect and help each other through life!

"Now," said John, and he brought his hand down with such a bang on the table before him that Betty nearly skipped out of her little shoes—only she controlled the start, for she would have died before she had let John see it, "we'll have no more of this nonsense!"

His face was very pale, and the lines around the mouth so drawn that it would have gone to any one's heart to have seen their expression.

"I don't know how you will change it, or help it," said Betty, lightly, to conceal her dismay at the turn affairs had taken, "I'm sure!" and she pushed back the light, waving hair from her forehead with a saucy, indifferent gesture.

That hair that John always smoothed when he petted her when tired or disheartened, and called her "child." Her gesture struck to his heart as he glanced at her sunny locks and the cool, indifferent face underneath, and before he knew it he was saying—

"There is no help for it now, I suppose."

"Oh, yes, there is," said Betty, still in the cool, calm way that ought not to have deceived him. But men know so little of women's hearts, although they may live with them for years in closest friendship. "You needn't try to endure it, John Peabody, if you don't want to. I'm sure I don't care!"

"What do you mean?"

Her husband grasped her arms and compelled the merry brown eyes to look up to him.

"I can go back to mother's," said Betty, provokingly. "She wants me any day, and then you can live quietly and live to suit yourself, and it will be better all around."

Instead of bringing out a violent protestation of fond affection and remorse, which she fully expected, John drew himself up, looked at her fixedly for a long, long minute, then dropped her arm, and said through white lips very slowly:

"Yes, it may be as you say, better all around. You know best;" and was gone from the room before she could recover from her astonishment enough to utter a sound.

With a wild cry Betty rushed across the room, first tossing the $10 bill savagely as far as she could throw it, and, flinging herself on the comfortable old sofa, broke into a flood of bitter tears—the first she had shed during her married life.

"How could he have done it—oh, what have I said? Oh, John, John!"

The bird twittered in his little cage over in the window among the plants. Betty remembered like a flash how John and she filled the seed-cup that very morning, how he laughed when she tried to put it in between the bars, and when she couldn't reach without getting upon a chair, he took her in his great arms, and held her up, just like a child, that she might fix it to suit herself. And the "bits" that he said in his tender way, they had gone down to the depths of her foolish little heart, sending her about her work singing for very gladness of spirit. And now!

Betty stuffed her fingers hard into her rosy ears to shut out the bird's chirping.

"If he knew why I sighed," she moaned. "Oh, my husband! Birthdays—nothing will make any difference now. Oh, why can't I die?"

How long she stayed there, crouched down on the old sofa, she never knew. Over and over the dreadful scene she went, realizing its worst features each time in despair, until a voice out in the kitchen said, "Betty!" and heavy footsteps proclaimed that some one was on the point of breaking in upon her uninvited.

Betty sprang up, choked back her sobs, and tried with all her might to compose herself and remove all traces of her trouble.

The visitor was the worst possible one she could have under the circumstances. Crowding herself on terms of the closest intimacy with the pretty bride, who with her husband had moved into the village a twelvemonth previous, Miss Elvira Simmons had made the very most of her opportunities, and by dint of making great parade over helping her in some domestic work, such as house-cleaning, dressmaking and the like, the maiden lady had managed to ply her other vocation, that of newsgatherer, at one and the same time, pretty effectually.

She always called her by her first name, though Betty resented it; and she made a great handle of her friendship on every occasion, making John rage violently and vow a thousand times the "old maid" should walk!

But she never had—and now, scenting dimly, like a carrion after its prey, that trouble might come to the pretty little white house, the make-mischief had come to do her work, if devastation had really commenced.

"Been crying!" she said, more plainly than politely, and sinking down into the pretty chintz-covered rocking chair with an energy that showed she meant to stay, and made the chair creak fearfully. "Only folks do say that you and your husband don't live happy—but la! I wouldn't mind—I know 'tain't your fault."

Betty's heart stood still. Had it come to this! John and she not to live happy! To be sure they didn't, as she remembered with a pang the dreadful scene of words and hot tempers; but had it gotten around so soon—a story in everybody's mouth?

With all her distress of mind she was saved from opening her mouth. So Miss Simmons, failing in that, was forced to go on.

"An' I tell folks so," she said, rocking herself back and forth to witness the effect of her words, "when they git to talkin', so you can't blame me if things don't go easy for you, I'm sure!"

"You tell folks so?" repeated Betty, vaguely, and standing quite still. "What? I don't understand."

"Why, that the blame is all his'n," cried the old maid, exasperated at her strange mood and her dullness. "I say, says I, why they couldn't no one live with him, let alone that pretty wife he's got. That's what I say, Betty. And then I tell 'em what a queer man he is, how cross, an'—"

"And you dare to tell people such things of my husband?" cried Betty, drawing herself up to her extremest height, and towering so over the old woman in the chair that she jumped in confusion at the storm she had raised, and stared blindly into the blazing eye and face rosy with righteous indignation—her only thought was how to get away from the storm she had raised, but could not stop. But she was forced to stay, for Betty stood just in front of the chair, and blocked up the way, so she slunk back into the smallest corner of it and took it as best she could. "My husband!" cried Betty, dwelling with pride on the pronoun—at least, if they were to part, she would say it over lovingly as much as she could till the last moment; and then, when the time did come, why people should know that it wasn't John's fault—"the best, the kindest, the noblest husband that ever was given to a woman. I've made him more trouble than you can guess; my hot temper has vexed him—I've been cross, impatient, and—"

"Hold!" cried a voice, "you're talking against my wife!" and in a moment big John Peabody rushed through the door, grasped the little woman in his arms, and folded her to his heart, right before old maid and all!

"Oh!" said Miss Simmons, sitting up straight, and setting her spectacles more firmly.

"And, now that you've learned all that you can," said John, turning round o her, still holding Betty, "why—you may go!"

The chair was vacant. A dissolving view through the door was all that was to be seen of the gossip, who started up the road hurriedly, leaving peace behind.

"Betty," said John, some half hour afterward, "what was the sigh for? I don't care now, but I did think, dear, and it cut me to the heart, how you might have married richer. I longed to put ten times ten into your hand, Betty, and it galled me because I couldn't."

Betty smiled and twisted away from his grasp. Running into the bedroom she presently returned still smiling, with a bundle rolled up in a clean towel. This she put on her husband's knee, who stared at her wonderingly.

"I didn't mean," she said, unpinning the bundle, "to let it out, now, but I shall have to. Why, John, day after to-morrow is your birthday!"

"So 'tis!" said John. "Gracious! has it come round so soon?"

"And, you dear boy," said Betty, shaking out before his eyes a pretty brown affair, all edged with silk of the bluest shade, that presently assumed the proportions of a dressing-gown—"this is to be your present. But you must be dreadfully surprised, John, when you get it, for oh, I didn't want you to know!"

John made the answer he thought best. When he spoke again, he said, perplexedly, while a small pucker of bewilderment settled between his eyes:

"But I don't see, Betty, what this thing," laying one finger on the gown, "had to do with the sigh."

"That," said Betty, and then she broke into a merry laugh, that got so mixed up with the dimples and the dancing brown eyes that for a moment she could not finish. "Oh, John, I was worrying so over those buttons! They weren't good, but they were the best I could do, then. And I'd only bought 'em yesterday. Two whole dozen. And when you put that $10 bill in my hand I didn't hardly know it, but I suppose I did give one little bit of a sigh, for I was so provoked that I hadn't waited buying them till to-day."

John caught up the little woman, dressing-gown and all! I don't think they have ever quarreled since—at least I have never heard of it.

THE dogs having learned, perhaps from the wolves, that sheep are good eating, it has become necessary now to protect the sheep from the dogs. Down in Jersey the farmers use goats for that purpose. Two goats can drive away a dozen dogs. A few doses of their peculiar treatment will cure a dog, and he leaves the premises without any more ifs or butts.

HOW MILTON CAME TO WRITE "PARADISE REGAINED."

It was at the time of the great plague that the poet of "Paradise Lost" took up his abode at Chalfont, and it was through the instrumentality of a common friend of his and William Penn's that this retreat was selected. Thomas Ellwood, the Quaker, had made Milton's acquaintance in London some years before, when hunted out of house and home by the Bucks Justices, and read Latin to him in his lodgings in Jewin street. When the plague grew fierce in the city the blind poet bethought him of his one-time secretary, and asked him to find him some retreat in his neighborhood. Ellwood took this "pretty box" for him; and it was here that he suggested to him the idea of "Paradise Regained." Milton had handed him the manuscript of "Paradise Lost," to pass his judgment on. "I pleasantly said to him," Ellwood relates in his "Life." "'Thou hast said much here of paradise lost, but what hast thou to say of paradise found?' He made me no answer, but sat some time in muse; then broke off that discourse and fell upon another subject. After the sickness was over, and the city well cleansed, he returned thither; and when afterward I went to wait on him there he showed me his second poem, called 'Paradise Regained,' and in a pleasant tone said to me, 'This is owing to you, for you put it into my head by the question you put to me at Chalfont, which before I had not thought of.'"—Alfred T. Story, in Harper's Magazine.

WHAT'S GOING TO MAKE POLYGAMY A FAILURE.

A man stepped into a Main street barber shop to get shaved. While the barber was passing the steel over his face, the man began to shed tears. This attracting the attention of the proprietor of the shop, he directed the manipulator of the razor to sharpen the implement. As the shave continued the man's tears flowed unceasingly, and the barber continued to whet his tool, occasionally changing razors, and striving as diligently as possible to ameliorate the sufferings of his customer.

"We are using the best razor in the shop, sir," said the man with the lather cup. "Your face must be very tender. Does it pain you much?"

"A razor pain me! Do you suppose that a man that has been through the war shrinks from physical suffering?"

"Then what the deuce have you been blubberin' about?" queried the boss.

"I got to thinking over bad news from the East. Another mother-in-law comin' out next week to spend the winter. Here's the money for the shave."

"I shan't charge you a cent," said the barber, sadly. "I never bleed a man's pocket when his heart's bowed down. Come in occasionally, and mingle your tears with mine. I've got some mothers-in-law myself. Four, by thunder!"

"That's what's goin' to make polygamy a failure in Utah," said the tearful man as he slammed the door.—Salt Lake Tribune.

MELISSA REMSBURG was the daughter of a farmer near Kansas, Ohio, and had two lovers. One of them was her own choice for a husband, and the other the choice of her parents; so she concluded to simplify matters by marrying both, which she did in the same town, on the same day, and made the best time on record. The parents' choice was a young farmer named Wyant, and at 3 p. m. she married him in a hotel parlor at Tiffin. At 3:50 she excused herself from the new bridegroom, asking him to wait for her; and, putting on her bonnet and cloak, left the house. At 4 o'clock she met Cline, her other lover, on the street, and with him went to the Probate Judge's office to get a license. The Judge told her he had issued a license to another man only a few hours before. She became very indignant, declared that it was a trick, and the credulous Judge, believing her story, issued another. Taking the document with them, the couple went to a Justice's office and were married. The groom then hired a team at the livery stable and drove six miles to the next railway station, where both took the Baltimore and Ohio train for Chicago.

THE PROFESSION OF JOURNALISM.

At a college commencement dinner, Mr. Z. L. White, editor of the Providence (R. I.) Press, was called upon to speak for the profession of journalism. He said, in substance: "I have been asked to say a word for a profession which does not need speaking for; the press, like the poor, you have always with you, and it needs no word from me to introduce it. The profession of journalism has grown up almost within the memory of those present. It is only a few years ago that newspapers were not the power that they are to-day. Among the influences tending to change the character of journalism and to elevate it to its present high standard, that of the colleges of the country and its institutions of learning is one of the strongest.

"The importance of the influence of the profession of journalism leads to the consideration of the responsibility of the journalist. There is no other class of professional men on whom so great a responsibility rests. The duty of the journalist to-day is not only to present to the world a mirror of events, to hold up a record of contemporaneous history, but also to present this record in such a way that the proper lesson may be drawn from it. After midnight, within an hour of the time when the paper goes to press, the editor hears for the first time of some event of great national importance; on the spur of the moment, without time for reflection, he must present it to the world in his editorial in such a way as will lead his readers to look upon it in the right and proper light. When we consider these things we cannot overestimate the responsibility which rests upon him.

"The great newspaper to-day is not the mouth-piece of politicians, or intended to promote the ambitions of single men who control them. As a class, the newspapers of to-day are independent, owned and controlled by men who have no special ambition of their own, and who are hence able better to judge events. The public service of this country is improving daily, and this fact is due, to a great extent, to the existence of a free and independent press.

"I would say to-day to those young men who proposed to enter journalism—you cannot place too high an estimate upon the calling you have chosen. Enter it with the idea of work. Journalism to-day demands a devotion such as no other profession requires. Of those who enter it not more than one-fourth continue to the end. The drudgery, the long hours, the incessant demands of journalism are too great for many to bear. But to him who enters it able and prepared to undergo the necessary strain and toil the possibilities of reward are great."

THE following extract from a letter written by a lady in Cleveland, in reference to the resting-place of our martyred President, will be read with interest: "So long a time has elapsed since the obsequies that many strangers visiting Cleveland are surprised to learn that a detachment of United States infantry are still detailed to watch the vault wherein lie the remains of our honored President. Night and day can be heard the measured tramp, tramp of the sentry on duty, and it is intended to continue this watchfulness until the body is deposited in the ground. Through the grated door of the vault can be seen the elegant casket given by the Masonic brethren. Covered with beautiful flowers, kept fresh by loving hands, it is still visited daily by hundreds of people, many of whom eagerly seek the cast-off blossoms as mementoes. Near the vault is the shelter-house, and on the other side of the lake the white tents of the soldiers are pitched. At the base of the hill upon which the monument is to be placed a glass house is erected, inclosing the funeral-car, still trimmed with immortelles and the trappings of woe.

COUNTRY AND CITY RAIN.

Considerable attention has been recently given to the difference between the rain of the city and the country. The country rain is neutral and is considered the best adapted for human consumption of any found above the earth, on the earth, or under the earth. The rain that falls in cities, on the other hand, is acid, corroding metals; evil effects are visible on every side, in paint, in all decorations, and, in fact, almost everything erected by man. The purest rain is that collected at the sea coast, more especially at considerable heights, while organic matter in the air usually corresponds with the density of population.

IT is a well-known fact that a grindstone sometimes explodes into fragments. Marble, we fear, is hardly safe for sculptors to use, as we noticed a placard in an art gallery the other day, evidently intended to warn visitors of danger, which read, "Parian marble busts."

THE amassing of riches for others to enjoy is, we believe, included among the "vanities" chronicled by the author of "Ecclesiastics." It is just now having a striking exemplification in Boston. The late Charles O. Rogers, principal owner of the Boston Journal, made a great deal of money, but did not live long to enjoy it, dying when a little over 50. He left his widow $400,000 outright, $200,000 to each of his three children, and about $200,000 more to trustees to administer for the benefit of the heirs generally. The trust has been well fulfilled, and the Journal, in which most of the property lies, has paid very handsomely. The widow unfortunately, however, fell in love and married John Cumming, an Englishman, her son's tutor, and a man much younger than herself. The nuptials took place about a year after her first husband's death, and naturally occasioned a great deal of comment. She is now repenting of her haste, and is seeking a divorce on the ground of Cumming's alleged misconduct in Europe. It is a sad story, and a proof that riches may bring anything but happiness.

JOURNALISTS AS JURYMEN.

A journalist of this city was yesterday summoned as a juryman in the criminal court, and asked to be excused on the ground that his time was fully occupied and that the paper on which he was engaged would be inconvenienced by his absence. Judge Pinkney at once granted his request, and remarked that he was opposed to taking newspaper men from their duties and placing them on a jury unless they so wished it. There were, he said, sufficient citizens to choose from them without taking from those whose services are so indispensible to the public.

A favorite plea for the greatness of the cotton market of New Orleans over all others is based upon the fact that if a bale of cotton be turned loose in the current of the headwaters of the Yellowstone river under the Rocky Mountains, and should meet with no natural or unnatural obstruction, it will float down to the wharf at New Orleans. If it should start from the head of the Alleghany, in New York; from the head of the Monongehela, in Virginia; from the head of the Mississippi, on the borders of Pembina; from the Akansas, in New Mexico and the Indian Territory; from the Tennessee river, in Virginia and North Carolina; from the head waters of the Canadian, the Illinois, the Wabash, the Mamia, the Ohio, the Cumberland and the Kentucky rivers, besides many others, the bale of cotton will float directly to New Orleans, should it meet with no interference or obstruction.

THE SLANDERER PHOTOGRAPHED.

If there is anything in this world which, above all things deserves damnation in the next, it is the slandering, viperous gossip, which feeds and thrives on scandals. There is nothing so cruel, so base, so cowardly. It hides its hideous countenance under the mask of friendship; it borrows the sweetest tones of language; it cloaks itself with respectability, and covers its hypocrisy with the veil of sincerity, to do more thoroughly its despicable work. It has no feeling of pity; the tenderest emotions of the heart are not sacred to its vulgar gaze; the purest womanhood has no shield from its venom. It enters society as a guest, and goes out as a theif, with the reputation of honest men and women dragging behind it in the dirt. No one is exempt from its cowardly innuendoes. It dissects the chastest character with as much calmness as a butcher cuts beef, and it has regard for the feeling of neither young nor old. And who are its votaries? Being without mercy or charity, without sense of decency, without generosity or refinment; persons whose innate coarseness creeps through the pores of the skin; who despise virtue because they have had no acquaintance with it; who ridicule the honest feelings of other's hearts because their own natures are incapable of entertaining any thought that is noble; who make crimes of trifles; who gain their neighbor's confidence to betary it; who know not what honor means, nor principle, nor self-respect. These are the wretches who cause families to separate, hearts to break, friends to be divided; and when the Judgment Day ends hell will be full of them.

Exchange.

SIXTY CENTS WORTH OF WHISKY.

Sixty cents invested in whiskey in the year 1869 cost Fannin county, Texas, in time and money, more than the revenues arising from the whiskey traffic for five years amounted to. We speak of the investment made by young Dean. He shot Dan Coulter, then the McDonalds shot and killed Dean. For this offence they were arrested, and after continuing the case several times were tried and convicted of manslaughter and sentenced to the penitentiary. While in jail they were rescued by their friends, breaking open the jail and liberating them. Taking it altogether, this 60 cents' worth of whiskey killed two men, made one widow, caused two men to be incarcerated, and kept in jail at an enormous expense to Fanin county." There are parallel cases all over the land, and what is the remedy?—Exchange.

TAKE YOUR HANDS OUT OF YOUR POCKETS.

To begin with, it does not look well when a young man crooks his arms and thrusts his hands into his pockets making a figure eight of himself, and then stands up against the sunny side of the house like a rooster in December.

How would the girls look all turned into eights and leaning against the wall? How would your mother look in that posture? You don't find her hands in her pockets. Your mother's hands! while you are loafing they are the hands that sew, and bake, and stew, and fry, and sweep, and darn, and nurse? but she does not sink them in her pockets and then loll against the building.

Are your hands cold? Warm them up at the end of the hoe handle and the scythe. Swing the hammer; drive the plane; flourish the axe. There is untold caloric about a spade, a trowel, a wrench.

An instance of the efficacy of cream tartar as a prophylactic against the infection of small-pox, has been recently demonstrated in a prominent family of Louisville. Several weeks ago a case of small-pox was developed in the house, and was sent to the eruptive hospital promptly, as soon as the nature of the disease was established beyond a doubt, but after all the members of the family had been exposed to the contagion for 2 or 3 days. By the advice of a friend, the family was induced to drink freely and often of cream tartar water, in the proportion of an ounce to a pint, of water. Every member of the family has so far escaped, while the coachman, who would not drink the cream tartar water, and who waited on the sick man, contracted the disease and is now a patient at the pest house. All fear of the reappearance of the disease in the family has been dissipated, and the use of this simple remedy as a prophylactic and a modifier of small-pox is recommended.

If an attempt should be made to Mahonize Alabama, the election law of the State would be a trump card of the coalitionists and would be played for all it is worth.

The Georgia Pacific is destined to be the railroad for Birmingham.

The Moon boys, charged with the murder of their aunt, Mrs. Tankersly, in Cherokee county, waived examination and were remanded to jail to await the action of the grand jury.

Mr. J. F. M. Davis has made his report to Dr. Cochrane, President of the State Board of Health, informing him of the disappearance of the last vestige of small pox in Calhoun county. Vaccination has prevented its spreading.

Albert Norton and his brother, "Bud" Norton, got into a difficulty in Henry county about the division of some land, when Albert seized his double-barrel gun and let fly both barrels at his brother. "Bud" then went and got his double-barrel gun, and returned to the house. Albert saw him coming and ran under the house to hide, but "Bud" peeped under there and saw his game, and to get even he banged both barrels into it. Fortunately neither gun was loaded with heavy shot, but at last accounts both, with the assistance of a physician, were picking shot out of their hides.

Hartselle Sentinel: Friday night last, as Mr. Haywood Speegle was coming into town to attend a temperance meeting, he was assailed by a highwayman, whose object was robbery. A short distance beyond Prof. McGaugh's residence, some unknown person stopped Mr. Speegle, by catching his horse by the bridle, and demanded his money. Not succeeding in getting it, the would-be robber let go his hold on the bridle rein and stepped to Mr. Speegle's side with a drawn knife, and threatened death to him if he did not produce the wanted pocket-book. Mr. Speegle, instead of complying with the demand, put spurs to his horse and bounded away, but not soon enough to avoid a blow that cut through his clothing and marked his body near his heart.

WHAT IT COSTS.

Our national Congress is a pretty expensive luxury, costing the American people, according to estimates set down as correct, about twenty-three dollars a minute for every minute that it is in session. Every ten minutes speech that is made in that body costs the people two hundred and thirty dollars, or where a member speaks for an hour, the cost is $1,380. There is a saying that "talk is cheap," but in this case it is the reverse, being rather expensive.—Exchange.

Sheriff's Sale.

By virtue of two fieri facias issued out of the clerk's office of the circuit court of Shelby county, and State of Alabama, and to me directed, whereby I am commanded to make the amount of a certain judgment recently obtained against C. W. Cary, and in favor of Anderson Green and James Spence, out of the goods, chattels, lands and tenements of the said C. W. Cary, I have levied on the following property to-wit: A certain lot or parcel of land bounded as follows: On the west by Mahon's creek from Mulkey's ford down to the mouth of a certain drain, and on the north by the east and west line, running to a certain mound in the rocky hill where it corners; on the east by the land bought by R. H. Meredith, of H. Butler, of Montevallo, and on the south by the line running through Mulkey's lane containing thirty acres more or less; also five acres more or less east of Mahon's creek, including the west bank running from Mulkeys ford up to the mouth of the Spring branch; also the southeast quarter of section 3, and the west half of the northwest quarter of section 2; the southeast quarter of the northwest quarter of section 2, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 2; the northwest quarter of the northeast quarter of section 10; the northeast quarter of the southwest quarter of section 3, and the south half of the northeast quarter of section 3, all of said lands being in township 28, range 12 east, containg five hundred and fifty acres more or less situated in chilton county in said State.

Therefore, according to said command, I shall expose for sale, at public auction, all the right, title and interest of the above named C. W. Cary in and to the above described property, on Monday, the 3d day of April, 1882, during the legal hours of sale, at the courthouse door, for cash, in clanton, Ala.

Dated this 28th day of February, 1882.

J. E. LOWE,

A case of small pox is reported at Simmon's mill in Shelby county.

John McCullough will play in Montgomery next Tuesday night.

Glad to meet Mr. J. C. Sewell, of Maplesville, in our office, on yesterday.

An exchange says that since "prohibition broke out" it is difficult to distinguish candidates from common people.

A severe wind, rain and hail storm, on last Tuesday, has placed roads in a bad condition, and retarded farm work considerably.

A good cook and a man to do house and garden work can both find employment on liberal wages by early application at this office.

Mr. W. L. Bandy, who left our county some two months since to recuperate his health in Florida, is, we are glad to learn, rapidly improving. He has our thanks for late Florida papers.

We regret to hear of the serious illness of Prof. W. A. Smith, our efficient tax assessor, which will account for his failure to meet some of his appointments as advertised, for the purpose of assessing taxes for 1882. We are glad to be able to state that he is improving.

We are glad to welcome to our county, Mr. J. B. Hobbs, of Athens, Ala., and a college comrade of not many years since, in the old Oak City. He is a nephew of Col. J. W. Sloss, and has taken charge of the commissary which has been established at the terminus of Col. Sloss' narrow guage railroad.

At the last term of Chancery Court for Chilton county, held last Friday, three divorces were granted. Martha Davenport, complainant, was granted a divorce from John Davenport, with privilege of again marrying. Grounds of divorce—abandonment. George Powell, complainant, was granted a divorce from Mary A. Powell, with privilege of again marrying. Grounds of divorce—abandonment. George Hunter (col'd), complainant vs. Eliza Hunter (col'd) was granted a divorce with privilege of again marrying. Grounds of divorce—adultery.

WHAT MRS. GRUNDY SAYS:

That vaccination has been general, and everybody you meet has a sore arm.

That a great many nobodies and very few somebodies are conspicuous for loafing about the streets on Sunday afternoon.

That foreigners say that the American swell represents thirty different kinds of the complete fool.

That when it becomes fashionable to know history, some of the young ladies will be better educated.

That the hang-around-the-door young men have grown to be a great nuisance at the churches.

That during the past week we have had fifty different kinds of weather, and conversation has consequently been lively among lovers, old maids and mothers-in-law.

That our town council ought to have quarantined against Jemison, when the small pox was reported at that point.

And that there are just one dozen men in Clanton who think they could "knock the stuffin' out" of Sullivan, the champion of the American prize ring, but that all are too busy to bother about sending a challenge.

THE COMMISSIONERS' COURT.

The following amounts were order to be paid out of the county treasury, for the purposes stated, by the court of county commissioners, at its last session:

Elias Minor $7.50 for making three coffins for paupers.

John Robinson $22 for making mile posts and signboards for public roads. Also T. J. Bates 50 cents and A. C. Poll $2 for same services.

Orders to the amount of $222 for the support of paupers for the first quarter of 1882.

Orders to the amount of $120.10 to pay for blanks and stationary for county officers.

John Englehardt $11 for work done on county jail.

W. H. Lawrence $13.50 for subscription to the Chilton View for the use of county officers, and making publication of Prohibition Election Notices for Beat No. 4.

R. Ehrman $13.79 for supplies furnished the county.

A. M. Kennedy $8.35 for sash furnished county jail.

H. J. Callen $128.50 for ex-officio and road service for first quarter of 1882, for one days service in commissioner's court, and making abstract for collector for 1881.

W. H. Foshee $50 for ex-officio service for first quarter of 1882.

James E. Lowe $79.95 for ex-officio and road service, for first quarter of 1882, and for washing clothing for prisoners in county jail.

B. Harris, J. J. Honeycutt, R. C. Lanoir and K. Wells $3.60 each for one day's service as county commissioners.

J. E. Evans 60 cents for candles and matches furnished county.

William Lambert $12 for the support of his insane son for first quarter of 1882.

E. T. Gullahorn $5 for hauling wood for court house and jail.

J. M. Parish $17.85 for money expended by him for the county.

H. J. Callen $4 for office stamp, and money paid for cutting wood for office.

W. E. Stewart $10 for medical services rendered the county.

The court also ordered that all persons sentenced to hard labor for the county should be hired to the Pratt Saw Mill Company at $8 per month each.

ENTERTAINMENT.

An entertainment consisting of charades and tableaux, will be given at Verbena, on Friday evening, March 10th, by the ladies of the Presbyterian Church, for the benefit of the Church. A pleasant time may be expected, and everybody should attend. The entertainment will be given at Miss Watson's school room, beginning at 7 o'clock.

MAPLESVILLE DOTS.

Business pretty brisk and the coldest weather of the new year.

Farmers are behind with work on account of bad weather.

We are informed that a traveller stopped here one night last week and made a meal of five pounds of cheese with crackers in proportion.

At the last meeting of the Hoe-Handle Club, a discussion arose between Siff. Gramin and Dick Backus, regarding the best plan of electioneering in the coming campaign. After a lengthy debate without reaching a decision, it was finally determined to act up the following motion, which was passed: That every legislative candidate be required to send to this club, his name, age, capacity of jaw, with synopsis of bills to be introduced; and all candidates must comply with this requirement before support will be extended.

TO FANNIE.

Dear Fannie, I have lost my heart;
The mishap, I declare,
Has given my nerves an awful start
Down that rough hill despair.

I'd tell you how the chance befell,
Could I collect my wits;
I only know a magic spell
Has knocked them into fits.

That I'm in love, there's little doubt,
And hopelessly it seems,
And sorely struggling to get out
Its bright, delusive dreams.

I wouldn't have had my wits deranged
By any such a chance;
And then, just think how very strange:
My heart went at a glance.

If ever in this world of change,
The little cheat I find,
I think I'll give it in exchange
For one I can call mine.

GEORGIA A. JONES.
Clanton, February, 1882.

JEMISON JOTTINGS.

The small pox excitement is subsiding. Mr. Samuel Bowdon, who came from Shelby Springs to his home at Jemison, Feb. 16, with the small pox, is now able to walk about the yard, and his younger brother, Jessie, who came home with the same disease several days later, is improving; and as no one has been allowed to visit the house, it is not likely that we shall have another case here. Nearly every body has been vaccinated.

Mr. I. N. Langston, is having his house neatly painted, which adds much to its appearance.

Mrs. Fadie Lawhorn, wife of Mr. Geo. Lawhorn, we regret to say, is seriously ill.

We hear talk of several houses being erected here soon. EGO.

LEVEL-HEADED OSCAR.

Who is this man with the long, thin legs, the stooping shoulders and the yellow, flowing hair? His name is Oscar Wilde. One day when the superintendent of a lunatic asylum was on a hunting expedition in London he picked up Oscar and took him before a magistrate who asked him his name.

"By the misty eyelids of the sleepy moon I cannot tell you," answered the prisoner. "Mamma would not like it."

From that moment he became famous. For breakfast he sips the dew from the honeysuckles, and his dinner consist of roast lily bugs flavored with lavender water. Half a dozen sachel-bags and ten trunks constitute his baggage. The trunks contain locks of hair which he purchased cheap at a Surrey ropewalk. No fashionable American girl will be long without one. His soul yearns after sunflowers. Give him his choice between a sunflower and a greenback and he will take the greenback. In Chicago he is destined to be most popular—his feet are so large. When he returns to his native land loaded with rocks his "mamma" will say to him.

"Oskie, the fortunes of the family are much improved. I want a new sealskin sacque and a dog cart. But the lilly worshipper will depart from her saying:

"Well, I should smile. What does the old woman take me for?"

After that, no Englishman will eat more beef with his lillies, or drink more beer with his sunflowers than Oscar.—Brooklyn Eagle.

LAWS REGULATING NEWSPAPER SUBSCRIPTIONS.

The following, from a judicial officer, is the decision of the United States Supreme Court:

1. Subscribers who do not give express notice to the contrary are considered wishing to continue the subscription.

2. If subsribers order the discontinuance of their periodicals the publishers may continue to send them until all arrearages are paid.

3. If subscibers neglect or refuse to take their periodicals from the office to which they are directed they are held responsible until their bill is paid and they have ordered them discontinued.

4. If subsribers move to other places without notifying the publishers, and the papers are sent to the former direction, they are held responsible.

Blaine is a wonderful man, unsurpassed in pluck, extraordinary in resources, intellectually agile as an acrobat or a cat, and lacking only two qualities to make him a great statesman—viz., safe judgment and political honesty. If we were in a scrape we would call upon Blaine to get us out of it. If we were not in a scrape we would depend on Blaine to get us into one.

Wetumpka Times.

Baldwin county has no resident lawyer—as has been stated; nor has it a jail. For several years after the war the courts were held under a tree. Yet, the laws are as faithfully observed as elsewhere, and whenever violated, the guilty one is made to feel that "the way of the transgressor is hard."

Tax Assessor's Notice!
LAST ROUND!

I will attend at the following times and places for the purpose of assessing the State and county taxes, of Chilton County, for the year 1882:

PERSIAN THEATRICALS.

It is fortunate that theater-goers at home do not take to heart the tragedies that are placed upon the English stage so much as the Persians, who, according to a writer, not only shed tears as the actors narrate the death of the Prophet, the martyrdom of Aly, and other incidents in the history of Mohammedanism, but howl piteously as they leave the theater, pull each other's hair, and run knives into themselves with despair. These representations are styled "tearzies," and they take place during the religious festival of the Moharrum, being got up by the wealthy people with the double object of propitiating the Deity and making a display of their rich tapestries and jewels on the stage.

The representations are held either in the court yards of their houses, or upon the public squares, the personages of importance viewing them from the windows of the houses, while the crowd gathers round the improvised stage, "camels at rest." Ushers, armed with heavy wands, go round to maintain order, and lads with pipes to hire, and water and cakes to sell, drone out their stock phrases until the story-teller, followed by six chorister boys, mounts the stage. His business is to prepare the audience for the representation by telling them stories relative to deaths of the Imaums, and, in order to produce a more powerful effect upon them, he interlards his story with frequent groans and tears, finally throwing down his turban, tearing open his dress and driving his nails into his chest. His despair moves the whole of the audience to tears, and he then descends from the stage with a bottle, and, sopping up their tears with a piece of cotton wool, presses them into it—one of these tears, in the opinion of the Persians, being sufficient to save the life of a patient who has been given up by the doctors. This prologue over, the actors appear, and the drama begins, with the result described above.

These, however, are not the only plays in the Persian repertory, the two other kinds being "temachas" and "karagues," of which the first named are farces or comedies, full of allusions more or less broad, and improvised by the "Lontys," who are professional dancers and musicians. These "Lontys" are often accompanied by dancing girls, and even by monkeys and bears, and they grime themselves with soot and flour. The "karagues" is very much like our own "Punch and Judy," the character of Punch being taken by Ketchel Pehlevan, who is invariably represented as bald, and whose favorite occupation is to deceive the Mollahs by pretending to piety. After having depicted to the Mollahs in very glowing terms the charms of religious life and the pleasures reserved to good Mussulmans in another world, he begins to sing anacreontic songs until the poor Mollah, carried away by enthusiasm, throws down the Koran and begins to play the guitar and drink the fine wine of Chiras.

A NEW SNOW PLOW.

A Kansas City inventor has patented a snow plow which promises to take the place of the cumbersome scoops which are attached to locomotives running on Northern railroads during the winter. It is an arrangement of steam pipes which can be heated at the will of the engineer, melting the snow as the engine slowly advances. The form of the ordinary snow plow is preserved so that the snow in shallow cuts can be thrown aside, as by the plow now in use; but when deep drifts are encountered the steam can be turned on the pipes and the road cleared in far less time than it can be done with shovels. Another advantage in the new invention is that it will not leave additional embankment to catch a still greater depth of snow in succeeding storms.

Miss Helen M. Stevens, a small, black-eyed young lady, teaches school at Rome, N. Y. William Brodock, a burly fellow of 19, is one of her pupils. Recently he refused to obey her, and she boxed his ears. He then indulged in profane and insulting language, and she attempted to punish him with a book, when he knocked it from her hands. Thereupon she took a stick of wood and subdued him. She was brought before the court for assault and battery, and Brodock was on hand, exhibiting numerous swellings and bruises; but the Judge, after hearing the evidence, discharged the defendant with the remark that it was her right to use the means necessary to maintain order.

A Canadian has recovered a verdict for $150 damages against the Trustees of the First Baptist Church of Montreal —a horse, frightened by snow falling from the church, having collided with his sleigh, to his personal injury. He lost his case on its first hearing. The Court of Review reversed that decision and awarded $150 damages, and the Court of Appeals has now sustained the latter judgment by a majority of the Judges.

People who cannot spend the season of winds and cold rains in sunny Florida, should keep Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup in the house. It is the best remedy for Colds and Coughs and will relieve sufferers at once.

Frederick Rausch, a wealthy farmer near Newcomerstown, Ohio, has a son 15 years old, who has a singular impediment in his speech, which is one of the most remarkable cases on record. He can talk intelligently to any member of his family, but the moment he leaves home and goes among strangers his voice leaves him, and it becomes utterly impossible for him to articulate one word. He can hear well enough, and is bright and intelligent looking. This most remarkable impediment in his speech when among strangers is attributed to a spasmodic contraction of the muscles of the vocal organs, superinduced by embarrassment or fright. A doctor who is treating him takes the boy to his office, where he gradually becomes familiar with the doctor, after which he is drilled on pronouncing certain words, such as the days in the week, etc.; also on short sentences. The doctor then takes him in some business house in the town where, in the presence of a crowd or several persons, he (the doctor) drills him on the same words and sentences until he speaks them distinctly.

From an extensive use of St. Jacobs Oil in the editor's family, we are able to speak confidently of its great worth in numerous ailments, and fully recommended it as an article most desirable to have on hand in the medicine chest.—Stamford (Conn.) Herald.

German scientists have discovered, through experiment, that the electric light is healthier than other methods of illumination, since it leaves the air purer, and that some colors—red, green, blue and yellow especially—are shown more distinctly by it than by daylight.

A Railroad Official Interviewed.

Not every one so cheerfully communicates his knowledge and opinions as recently did E. L. Loweree, Esq., cashier of the Cincinnati Southern Railway, that splendid outlet to the South from the Ohio. Our representative waited upon Mr. Loweree, and in reply to certain questions the latter gentleman observed: "I was suffering from a very severe attack of rheumatism in my right foot; it was in a terrible condition; the pain was almost intolerable; our family physician waited on me without success; I sent for another well-known M. D., but even the twain could do nothing for me; I could not get down here to the office to attend to my duties; in fact I could not put my foot under me at all, and after nine weeks' suffering I began to grow desperate. My friend (whom, of course you know, for he is known by everybody), Mr. Stacey Hill, of the Mount Auburn Inclined Plane Railroad Co., called to see me; he spoke very highly of St. Jacobs Oil, and recommended the remedy to me in glowing terms. I laughed at the idea of using a proprietary medicine, and yet the party recommended it, (Mr. Stacey Hill, remember), being a man of sound judgment, set me to thinking the matter over. The next day, when the physicians called, I dismissed them, and said to myself that I would let nature take its course. That resolution lasted just a day. On the following morning I, in a fit of desperation, sent a servant for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil. I applied that wonderful remedy, and it penetrated me so that I thought my foot was about to fall off, but it did not; in fact it did just the opposite. The next morning the pain had entirely left my foot, the swelling was reduced, and really the appearance was so different altogether from the day before, that it actually surprised me. I applied more of the St. Jacobs Oil, and that afternoon I walked down here to the office, and was able to attend to my duties and get around as well as any one. Let me say for St. Jacobs Oil that it beats railroad time, and is always sure to win.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

A recent judicial decision in England recognizing all persons holding a room in a house and holding a latch-key as being, under the terms of the last extension of the franchise in towns act, entitled to a vote, will add tens of thousands to the English voting lists.

"Golden Medical Discovery" (words registered as a trade-mark) cures all humors from the pimple or eruption to great virulent eating ulcers.

Ex-Senator Thurman was looking at his boxes in which his private books and papers had been packed in his old committee room. He saw that the lettering on the boxes was "Hon. A. G. Thurman. Keep Dry." Turning to a friend, he said, "Who the deuce would ever think of giving me such advice as that."

"Throw Physic to the Dogs, I'll None of it."

We do not feel like blaming Macbeth for this expression of disgust. Even nowadays most of the cathartics are great repulsive pills, enough to "turn one's stomach." Had Macbeth ever taken Dr. Pierce's "Purgative Pellets," he would not have uttered those words of contempt. By druggists.

The Canadian cause is not altogether hopeless. The young women students of the Presbyterian College in Ottawa, Canada, learned that a poor woman, who obtain a living for herself and children by washing, was laid up by sickness. Pity touched their hearts. The next morning they went to her house, did the washing and ironing for her, and sent the clothes home.

A GOOD FAMILY REMEDY!
STRICTLY PURE.
HARMLESS TO THE MOST DELICATE.
By its faithful use CONSUMPTION HAS BEEN CURED when other Remedies and Physicians have failed to effect a cure.

JEREMIAH WRIGHT, of Marion County, W. Va., writes us that his wife had Pulmonary Consumption, and was pronounced incurable by their physician, when the use of Allen's Lung Balsam entirely cured her. He writes that he and his neighbors think it the best medicine in the world.

WM. C. DIGGES, Merchant, of Bowling Green, Va., writes, April 4th, 1881, that he wants us to know that the Lung Balsam has cured his Mother of Consumption, after the physician had given her up as incurable. He says others knowing her case have taken the Balsam and been cured; he thinks all so afflicted should give it a trial.

DR. MEREDITH, Dentist, of Cincinnati, was thought to be in the last Stages of Consumption and was induced by his friends to try Allen's Lung Balsam after the formula was shown him. We have his letter that it at once cured his cough and that he was able to resume his practice.

WM. A. GRAHAM & CO., Wholesale Druggists, Zanesville, Ohio, writes us of the cure of Mathias Freeman, a well-known citizen, who had been afflicted with Bronchitis in its worst form for twelve years. The Lung Balsam cured him, as it has many others of Bronchitis.

AS ALSO CONSUMPTION, COUGHS, COLDS, ASTHMA, CROUP.

C. S. MARTIN, Druggist at Oakly, Ky., writes that the ladies think there is no remedy equal to Lung Balsam for Croup and Whooping Cough.

A Friend in Need is a Friend Indeed.

And by such a one's sympathizing advice and aid many a trouble has been lifted and burden lightened. Such a friendship is worth keeping, and when, from his experience, he advises and instructs, his opinions should be heeded. If kind words can never die, and good deeds are never lost, the inducement for always doing the good one can is still a great one. Many people imagine that they had better do nothing than do a little, forgetting that it is the detail that makes the aggregate—the drops that form the showers—the little kindnesses of life that make existence endurable. As, in the picture, the good old St. Jacob is extending relief to the suffering suppliant by offering a bottle of that wonderful remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, so all can do something of benefit for his fellow men in their times of trouble or sickness. In how many instances could the simple mention of the words "St. Jacobs Oil," coupled with terms of indorsement and encouragement, bring relief and cure to those suffering with rheumatism. In view of the wonderful record of this Great German Remedy in the cure of rheumatism, neuralgia and all painful diseases, it appears in the light of strong duty for everyone to patiently, yet persistently, urge its application in the diseases named, bearing in mind that the highest good from man to man consists in that which tends to promote their peace, welfare and general health. Amongst others who have no hesitation in giving free expression to their opinion is Bishop Gilmour, of Cleveland, Ohio, who has used the Great German Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, and endorses it highly. He writes about it as follows: "I am pleased to say that the use of St. Jacobs Oil has benefited me greatly, and I have no hesitation to recommend it to all as an excellent curative."

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of iron that will not blacken the teeth, so charcteristic of other iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy, has in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians, have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic is a necessity in my practice.

FRUITS AND FLOWERS.

BY JOHN G. WHITTIER.

Oh, Painter of the fruits and flowers,
We own Thy wise design,
Whereby these human hands of ours
May share the work of Thine!

Apart from Thee we plant in vain
The root and sow the seed;
Thy early and Thy later rain,
Thy sun and dew we need.

Our toil is sweet with thankfulness,
Our burden is our boon;
The curse of earth's gray morning is
The blessing of its noon.

Why search the wide world everywhere
For Eden's unknown ground?
That garden of the primal pair
May never more be found.

But, blest by Thee, our patient toil
May right the ancient wrong,
And give to every clime and soil
The beauty lost so long.

Our homestead flowers and fruited trees
May Eden's orchard shame;
We taste the tempting sweets of these
Like Eve, without her blame.

And, north and south and east and west,
The pride of every zone,
The fairest, rarest and the best
May all be made our own.

Its earliest shrines the young world sought
In hill-groves and in bowers;
The fittest offerings thither brought
Were thy own fruits and flowers.

And still with reverent hands we cull
Thy gifts each year renewed;
The good is always beautiful—
The beautiful is good.

THE LECTURE.

'A lecture, eh?" said Deacon Hobn, as he stood entranced before the lletin board of the Stub Mountain Lyum. "And upon the 'Rights of Wom?' Well, I swan! Mrs. Hobson, 'll be a-waitin' to hear it, an' I ouldn't wonder, if Jemimy Ann set her dander, she'd go into the barin. Gals is always racin' after every w idee. And p'raps it's a good thing stir us country folks up—a rousin' d lecture once in a while. Tickets cents. Wal, I'll think about it."

'A lecture? said Dr. Briggs, the wly fledged M. D., who had just hung t his glittering blue-and-gold sign; nd respecting woman's rights? I cant say that I approve of the subject; t a new-comer like myself must show nself in public, and there are so few portunities in Stub Mountain. Upon e whole, I think that I will take a ket."

"Woman's rights?" said old Mrs. x, who was always tormenting the lectmen for the privilege of franchise election day, and who went out to ther her own hay, in harvest time, h a man's boots and rather more than an's strength. "I'm powerful glad t! The subject needs agitation in a ce like this, where there's wus than yptian darkness. I'll go if it costs a whole week's butter money!"

And thus, in various styles from vari- motives, the Stub Mountaineers mmented on and approved of the lect- which was to be delivered at the eum on that Wednesday evening.

Squire Dooley stroked his long beard he checked his gray pony before the lage store.

"I suppose my girls will insist on ing," said he; "but there are so few ngs going on at Stub Mountain that seems a pity to deny them a little rection."

And the landlord of the Stub Mountain tel chuckled.

"It was an ill wind that blew good to body," he said, "and any popular senion was good for business."

This was on Tuesday. Upon the ednesday morning a stout gentleman a chaise drew up to the hotel and utted up to the bar, with a very rubind face and little, fiery eyes.

"Mary Smith lectures here to-night?" d he.

"I guess you're about right there, uire," said the landlord, feeling in his cket for the bundle of tickets which lyceum proprietor had authorized m to sell. "A pop'lar subject, too," t can read all about it on the bulletin ard out there, and—"

"I forbid it!" said the stout gentlen, growing redder and more apoplec- with every moment.

"Land o' Goshen!" ejaculated the ndlord.

"She is my wife," said the stranger. My name is Smith—Zerubbabel Smith and I won't be disgraced by any of is public-lecturing nonsense."

"Yes, I know," said the landlord; but I don't b'lieve the law will uphold in it, Squire, arter the tickets are d and—"

"Hang the law!" shouted Mr. Zerubbel Smith, bringing his gloved fist wn among the glasses with a bang. I don't care two straws for the law! y wife is my wife, and I won't have her aking a Merry Andrew of herself here or anywhere else! When do you expect her?"

"The room was engaged from 12 o'clock," falter'd the landlord; "but—"

"Very well," roared the red-faced man, "I'll just go and stroll around the village, and you let me know when she arrives—d'ye hear?"

Mr. Zerubbabel Smith had hardly betaken himself to the shadow of the old elms on the village green, when an elderly woman of a starched appearance came in, with a striped carpet-bag on one arm, and carrying a gingham umbrella in the other hand.

"Is this the Stub Mountain Lyceum?" said she, primly.

"No, marm!" said the landlord. "This 'ere's the tavern. The lyceum ain't open till 8 o'clock. Want to buy tickets for the lecture?"

"Certainly not!" said the elderly female.

"P'raps you'd like to engage a room," said the landlord, with a glance at the carpet-bag.

"Nothing of the sort!" said the lady.

The font of the landlord's imagination was hopelessly drained dry by this time. He said nothing more, but stared hard at the starched female.

"I wish to see Miss Smith," said she, abruptly.

"Eh?" said the landlord.

"The lecturer on—Women's Rights," with a little grimace at the words, as if they had a bitter taste.

"She ain't arriv' yet" said the landlord.

"I do not intend to allow this outrage on public taste!" said the lady, vehemently.

"Marm?" said the landlord.

"I am Miss Smith's mother!"

"Be you?" gasped mine host.

"And here I set until she presents herself," said Mrs. Smith, depositing herself on the nearest chair, and clasping both hands firmly over the umbrella-handle.

The landlord looked feebly at her, and almost within the same second in hurried a short, over-dressed lady, with curls, jewelry, bangles and a scarlet shawl, while a shabby black-silk skirt trailed its flounces over the dusty floor.

"Landlord," said she, "take down those posters at once!"

"What for, marm?" cried the poor man.

"It's swindling!" said the curly fair one; "downright swindling! We are partners, and Miss Smith is to lecture nowhere unless I sing ballads in the intermissions. It's share and share alike in the profits and the expenses, and I won't be cheated! And so you may tell her, landlord!"

The landlord smote his forehead in despair.

"Be I goin' crazy?" he said, "or is the whole 'varsal world agee? Miss Smith ain't here, nor Mary Smith ain't, nor Mrs. Smith, nor none of the Smiths, as I know of!"

"Landlord," said the curly lady, screwing up her thin lips, "you are in the conspiracy against me!"

The landlord uttered a groan.

"I wish to goodness I'd never heard of the whole thing," said he.

"But if there's law and justice in the land, I'll have my rights!" screamed the excited lady. "I'll telegraph to Boston to a lawyer. I'll have up the constable. I'll—"

The landlord was vaguely considering in his own mind whether it was best to go under the counter, escape by the back window or seize his grandfather's rusty musket from the iron hook where it hung above the chimney piece, and defy the whole party then and there, when a merciful Providence interfered in his behalf. The depot hack rumbled up to the door, and out stepped a tall, pretty young woman with deep blue eyes and bronze-brown hair, a French gray traveling dress and a marvelously composed manner.

"Mary Smith!" said she to the landlord. "Are my rooms ready? I lecture here to-night in the lyceum."

"Never was so glad to see nobody in my born days," croaked the landlord. "Yes, the rooms is ready; but your husband, he's out on the green, and your mother's here a-waitin' to forbid the banses, and your pardner a-vowin' and a-swearin' she's been swindled, and—"

"It's some mistake," said Miss Smith, in her clear, incisive voice. "I have no husband. My mother has been dead seven years, and a partner is a luxury in which I have never indulged myself."

"This ain't my daughter!" said the starched female. "My Mary Smith has red hair, and she stutters."

"Quite a different sort of person from my partner," said the lady with the red shawl.

"And my wife weighs 200 pounds, and she wears the Bloomer costume," unwillingly confessed the stout person, who had by this time come in from the green, and was standing staring in the doorway.

The landlord heaved a mighty sigh of relief.

"Wal," said he, "I don't see but that the lectur' may go on, after all."

The three discontented spirits vanished. Miss Smith retreated to her room, and the landlord breathed freely again.

But in the afternoon train from Boston a young man in the undress uniform of a naval officer, came unexpectedly upon the scene.

"Is this the place where Mary Smith lectures to-night?" he asked of the landlord.

"I believe so," said that worthy, secretly wondering if there were any more relations to object. "Ef you want to speak to her, there she is out in the back garding, reading poetry under the pear trees."

"Polly," said the young officer, leaning over the pretty, French gray shoulder.

"I hear you," said Miss Smith, turning over a leaf and pretending not to be aware of the pink flush which was overspreading her cheek.

"Are you really determined to go on with this public-lecturing tour?" he asked, quietly.

"Why shouldn't I?" cross-questioned Miss Smith.

"Because I don't like it, Polly."

"You quarreled with me," said Mary.

"I beg pardon," said the young officer, "you quarreled with me!"

"Do you really care?" said Mary Smith, melting into softness.

"I care more than you will ever know!" he answered, fervently. "Polly, I love you! And as for women's rights, you shall have every right you wish, if only you'll give up this lecturing business and marry me!"

She smiled—hesitated—visibly yielded.

"But I've made the engagement."

"Break it, then," said the officer. "The clergyman lives just across the green—I had his house pointed out to me. Let's go there this very minute and get married!"

Mary Smith laughed and blushed, and burst into tears, and finally put her hand into that of the naval officer.

"Have it your own way," said she. "But I don't know what the public will say."

"Henceforward," said Capt. Lacy, "I am to be your public. And my verdict is entirely in your favor."

So there was no lecture in the Stub Mountain Lyceum that night. And the stout man went home, where he found his wife and mother-in-law in a great rage, the starched female proceeded to the nearest camp-meeting, and the curly ballad-singer composed a new song called "Love's Triumph," founded on the incident from real life which had just transpired.

"After all," said the bride, "Smith is an awkward name. And I'm glad I've changed it to Lacy."

SINCE the war between France and Germany the growth of the two countries in population has been curious in its contrasts. Germany has increased by 4,500,000 souls, but France by only 612,000. Births in France in 1867 were 26¼ in every 1,000 inhabitants; but in 1878 they were only 25¼ in every 1,000. The figures which correspond to these in Germany are 38 3-5 and 38¼. For 1867 the excess of births over deaths in France was 140,000; in 1878 it was only 98,175. Germany, on the other hand, shows an excess for 1869 of 428,000, and for 1878 one of 556,506. With these figures as a starting point it is intimated that at the end of the century, provided emigration and immigration do not interfere with conditions as they now are, France will have scarcely 40,000,000 people to the 60,000,000 that Germany will have. And this growth of Germany is in despite of an immense emigration to the United States and other countries, while nobody leaves France. The fact is that the Germans have large families, while the French are just the reverse in this respect. The average French family consists of but two or three children, while the Germans number at least half a dozen.

THE British Admiralty have directed compressed jute to be tried as armor against Nordenfelt and Gatling guns, with a view to ascertain whether it can be used, principally in torpedo vessels, instead of iron and steel.

CONGRESSIONAL SUICIDES.

There have been a number of members of Congress who have committed suicide.

Haywood Chauncy Riddle shot himself through the head, in Tennessee, about 1875. He was undoubtedly insane.

James Blair, a Representative from South Carolina, blew out his brains at a boarding-house on Capitol Hill, April 1, 1834.

Felix McConnell, a member from Alabama, committed suicide, in a fit of delirium, at the St. Charles Hotel, Washington, by stabbing himself and then cutting his throat, Sept. 10, 1846.

Representative James Ashmore, from South Carolina, blew out his brains at Sardis, Miss., Dec. 6, 1861.

Elijah Hise, Representative in the Fortieth Congress, committed suicide at Russellville, Ky., May 8, 1876.

John White, Representative from Kentucky, committed suicide at Richmond, Ky., Sept. 27, 1845.

James G. Wilson, United States Senator from New Jersey, threw himself from his house, in a fit of delirium, in 1832, and was killed.

William Ramsey, Representative from Pennsylvania, committed suicide at Barnum's Hotel, in Baltimore, by shooting himself through the eye with a pistol, about 1840.

John Ewing, of Indiana, was found dead in his room at Vincennes in 1839, and on his table the following epitaph:

Here lies a man who loved his friends,
His God, his country, and Vincennes.

Representative Alfred B. White, of Ohio, committed suicide by taking poison on the grave of his two children, at Columbus, Aug. 1, 1865. He was charged with improper acts in connection with cotton speculations.

James Henry Lane, United States Senator from Kansas, committed suicide at Fort Leavenworth, about 1866.

James S. Johnson, Representative from Kentucky, committed suicide while suffering from ill-health, at Owensboro, Ky., Feb. 12, 1878.

ACCIDENTALLY KILLED.

A number of Congressmen and ex-Congressmen have met with accidental deaths.

Clement L. Vallandigham died from the accidental discharge of a pistol in 1870, while arguing a murder case at Lebanon, Ohio.

Robert Young, United States Senator from Indiana, was killed by a railroad train while walking on the track, at Indianapolis, Nov. 14, 1856.

Abraham B. Venable, United States Senator from Virginia, perished in the burning of the Richmond Theater, Dec. 21, 1811.

James Martin, Representative from South Carolina, was drowned on the passage from New Orleans to Galveston, Nov. 15, 1857. He was the founder of the Southern Quarterly Review.

Josiah Stoddard Johnson, Senator from Louisiana, died May 19, 1843, from the effect of an explosion of gunpowder on a steam packet on the Red river.

Charles J. Julian, Senator from Delaware, died Oct. 17, 1862, from injuries received while experimenting with a rifle-cannon which he had invented.

HOMICIDES.

There have been members of Congress who have killed men not on the field of honor.

STATISTICS of railroads constructed in the Northwest, embracing six companies, show that 2,081 miles of new track have have been laid in 1881 as against 1,478 miles in 1880. The Northern Pacific has added 333 miles and the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company 225 miles, making the total construction of that single system of 558 miles. The Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha has added 178 miles; the Chicago and Northwestern, 89 miles; the Iowa Southwestern, 87 miles; the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul, 471 miles. The Southwest has not been behindhand. In 1865 there were only five lines of railway in Texas; now there are twenty-eight lines in active operation, and 1,634 miles of road have been constructed within the year. Several of these roads are pointing into Mexico. New Orleans has now a connection with the Pacific coast, though the main line between Shreveport and New Orleans is not yet completed. Together the Northwest and Southwest have added 3,715 miles of new railroads in 1881.

COL. JOHN S. MOSBY is said to have written home to a friend in Alexandria, Va., that a good dentist could make a fortune in Hong Kong, China, in less than ten years, as good dentists are now hard to find there, and the charges for any kind of dental work are enormous.

MORE TREES WANTED IN THE PRAIRIE STATES.

During the last twenty years, and especially during the last ten years, much has been done in the way of planting trees upon the prairies of Illinois, Iowa and Kansas, but it is the result of individual intelligence and taste more than of public enterprise. Ten years ago when it was proposed to place in the constitution of this State a clause requiring county boards to encourage the planting of trees along public roads, and generally throughout the State, it was rejected on the ground that to plant trees on the road-side would shade too much land and injure the value of farms. There has since then a more intelligent sentiment grown up in favor of tree-planting. In some parts of the West there have been exemptions from taxes voted to land on which groves and forests have been planted. In other parts land has been voted by the section to those who have planted lots of eighty or 100 acres and have seen that the growing trees were properly cared for. But in this State the planting of trees has been a matter of individual care. Thousands of farmers have planted groves near their dwellings and barns; others have taken strips along the exposed sides of their farms and planted them with forest trees to grow up thickly, and in a few years thinning them out. They are planted for protection against the severities of summer and winter storms and high winds. In almost every one of the once bare and shadeless prairie fields there are now to be seen at proper distances and localities and in sufficient numbers trees under which the cattle can find in hot weather some shady escape from the blazing sunlight. At all convenient fence corners and along the roadsides there are trees growing up all over Illinois where once there was not a shade-tree to be seen in a day's journey. Where orchards can be successfully maintained, they are to be found, but as these are not to be depended on, there are thousands of lots of five, ten, twenty and even forty acres to be seen on which are growing vigorously trees of every variety, including oak, walnut, hickory, ash, maple, beech, locust, willow, chestnut, buckeye, and other varieties of trees. As a general thing the growth of these trees in our prairie land is vigorous and healthy. They are already numerous enough and far enough advanced to give life and beauty to the landscape; this is strikingly evident by contrasting a farm thus liberally planted with one on which the dry rail fence is the only thing visible above the naked prairie. Thousands of farms on the prairies have now groves and small forests already sufficiently grown to furnish firewood.

It is to be hoped that this great work will be continued until the landscape of Illinois, and of Iowa, and of the prairies generally, will be as diversified with forest, grove and plain as is possible in the absence of hills and valleys. This improvement, which costs so little, and which will add so much to the value and to the comfort of our Western farms, is one of the best investments that can be made. Every man owning a farm should put a few acres in trees, and should plant a tree at every available corner where it can be utilized for any purpose.—Chicago Tribune.

THE following is told of Frelinghuysen, President Arthur's new Secretary of State. Ex-Senator Frelinghuysen is popularly supposed to be a man of cold heart and of little feeling, and in whose nature pride of race rules supreme; but I know an incident which contradicts all this, and shows him in his true light; an incident which he has to-day forgot, and which he thought unknown at the time to any one but his coachman and the recipient of his kindness. It occurred during the winter so famous for its heavy sleets, about five years ago, and it was during one of the worst of those storms. A poor Irish woman was struggling along I street toward her home, with a heavy bundle in her arms; she was slipping and falling, and seemed quite unable to make headway against the stinging gale. The Senator was coming from his door to his carriage, on his way to a state dinner, when he saw her. He stopped, and then went toward her, saying, with the greatest courtesy he would have shown to a lady: "You seem to have trouble getting along?" "God knows I have, sir," she answered, almost crying. "Well, step into my carriage here and tell my man where to drive you." And then he fairly ran back to the house to escape the storms of blessings that fell with true Irish warmth athwart the storm.

A sight of thee hath gladdened;

BOB INGERSOLL has given a half hour of his time to a consideration of the subject of reform in the official habits of the President of the United States. He declares that the White House is a "horrid, cheerless old barrack." He says the Government ought to give the President a house which should be his castle, and into which no man should enter unless invited. He wants the President to have a private secretary capable of saying "No" to about ninety-nine out of every hundred callers at the Presidential mansion, so that the President's privacy may not be interrupted by the "American citizen from Gilligan's Mills," who is invariably consumed by a desire to talk over the political situation with the nation's Executive, in order that, upon his return to Gilligan's Mills, he may talk over in the bar-room the fact that he has talked over the political situation with the "Great Father," at Washington. There should be a better system at the White House, explains Mr. Ingersoll, so that the President can have "six hours a day for play." He wants the receptions discontinued, because they are "an imitation of monarchy," and because "they convert the President into a pump," and give everybody "a chance to take a jerk at the handle."

BIRMINGHAM AND MOBILE.

The Washington correspondent of the Mobile Chronicle says:

The primeval inhabitant of the coal and iron fields about Birmingham has at length triumphed. He, Columbus Neely, Napoleon Hill and two others, owners of the the richest coal fields about Birmingham, have effected negotiations in New York to result in the accession of much capital to Alabama enterprise, and, luckily, in the addition of much shekels to the wealth of these gentlemen. They gave a million dollars for mining property near Birmingham. They have profits of a million and still own property which they deem of inestimable value. Two thousand people live about the mouth of a cavern they have dug in the side of a mountain and ten thousand will speedily be drawn to that vicinity by enterprises to be inaugurated by New Yorkers. Such are facts given by a Wall street operator in coal and iron mines, and such is the luck of Alabama and of a few of its most enterprising citizens. Pittsburg papers say that the best iron brought to that market comes from Birmingham, paying its producers $10 per ton profits and still underselling Pensylvania iron in all the markets of Pensylvania. In other words, Pittsburgh capital must go to Birmingham. Peters says that Birmingham coal will yet drive that of Pittsburg out of all Southern markets. Gen. Gordon is building railways to accomplish this result. Birmingham only needs to make its wonderful resources known to become the central seat of the manufacturing energies of our race, and Birmingham is only an upper faubourg of the Mobile of the future.

THE RAILROAD COMMISSION.

Ed. Chilton View: Dear Sir—You published some time in December last, perhaps about the 15th or 20th, a communication, signed "Merchant," in which the writer did not get his facts and figures presented in an intelligent form; (perhaps from part of his communication having been lost). Ill health has prevented me from making this correction sooner, but if you will again allow me room in your columns, will try to be short and explicit.

The writer having heard that the Railroad Commission would only correct "through rates" on freight and leave the railroads to manage "local rates" as they please, would beg leave to call their attention to some local freight rates.

In December, 1880, we ordered a car load of corn from Athens, Tennessee, and got through rates to Calera, Ala., at 25 cents per 100 pounds. The Selma, Rome & Dalton railroad charged us $35 for transporting the car from Dalton to Calera, a distance of 162 miles. This charge is not quite 22 cents per mile for transportation of car; that was "through rates."

We paid the L. & N. railroad $35 for transporting the same car from Calera to Jemison a distance of 11 miles, or at the rate of $3.18 per mile for transportation of same car of corn (500 bushels); that was "local rates." Suppose it had come through from Louisville at the same rate, a distance of 400 miles, the freight would have been $1,272, nearly five times as much as the corn was worth in Louisville at that time. This shows the difference between through rates and local rates. If the S. R. & D. R. R. could transport a car for 22 cents per mile, it looks like the L. & N. railroad could have transported it for less than $3.18 per mile.

I am not so illiberal as to contend that railroads should carry local freight, for short distances, if handling the goods, and stopping to deliver them, would amount to more than their compensation; but in this case, they did not handle the freight, the car was already loaded, they only coupled it to their train and left it on the side track at Jemison. The S. R. & D. railroad had the same trouble of coupling and uncoupling. It cost us 7 cents per bushel to bring this corn from Calera, and Calera merchants could of course undersell us 7 cents per bushel, and make the same profit,

Do not understand me as contending that the L. & N. railroad charges higher local rates than the other railroads that exercise the privilege of making their own rates. In a communication published in the Shelby Sentinel, of a recent date, "W." (than whom no one carries a leveler head) complains that the S. R. & D. railroad charges nine cents per bushel for transporting corn from Calera to Montevallo, a distance of 7 miles; worse than the L. & N. charge of 7 cents for 11 miles. Suppose Montevallo's customers go to Calera for cheap corn. They can buy it at 9 cents cheaper than at Montevallo, but the loss of time of the team and driver is as much as the 9 cents gained on the price of the corn. Too much difference in price for so short a distance.

On June 25, 1881, we shipped a car load of hoops from Jemison to Whiting's a distance of 18 or 20 miles. Freight $7.20. On Aug. 29, 1881, shipped another car of hoops to the same point, and at same rate. On December 13th, shipped another car load of hoops from Jemison to Whiting, and the freight was $12, an advance in local rates of 66 2-3 per cent. Perhaps the first rate ($7.20) was not enough to pay the railroad, as it was only 36 cents per mile for transportation, or perhaps they are "revising," "reconstructing or "Mahoning" their local rates on freight, so as to offset the reduction made by the Railroad Commision in through rates and in passenger fare.

The rate on through freights will, to a certain extent, regulate itself by competing railroads, but the local rates, depend entirely on the consciences of railroad officials, which are too often made of rubber.

I have not seen the acts of the Railroad Commission. But suppose they have reduced through rates 20 or 25 per cent.; now suppose the railroads raise local rates 20 or 25 per cent. I think it a reasonable supposition that nineteen-twentieths of all the goods received in Montgomery, or other distributing points, are again shipped to the consumers at local rates. If the above suppositions are correct, will the consumers get their goods delivered any cheaper than before the organization of the Railroad Commission?

It is well known that all the corn we import into the State, comes from the northwest. Why then do we have to go south to Montgomery to buy the cheapest corn, and the same corn that passed our doors, a few days previously; we answer, that the railroad will not stop a car-load of corn at Jemison, for the same rate that it will carry it to Montgomery, 51 miles further south. The wholesale corn dealer makes his profit, and the railroad charges a local rate of nearly eight cents per bushel to return the corn to Jemison, and still it is cheaper for us to buy our corn in Montgomery than to buy it in Nashville or Louisville and pay the freight charged from those places. Our customers pay from 10 to 12 cents per bushel more for corn than they should, and that amount is divided between the Montgomery wholesale dealer and the railroad for return local freight over the same railroad that had so recently carried it south.

I was once in conversation with a railroad official, who said, "it was to the interest of railroads to give through rates to certain places, and build them up into cities, and make distributing points of them." But is it to the interest of cities at the expense of the consumers of the entire State? If it is worth twenty, twenty-five or thirty cents per mile to transport a car of corn from the State line to Montgomery why not stop it at Jemison or any other railroad station where there is a side track, at the same rate per mile? Then the consumer would have the advantage of the 10 or 12 cents that are now divided between the wholesale dealer and the return local freight."

I believe the Railroad Commission have, in some instances, compelled certain railroads to establish depots at certain points where they were needed for the convenience of the people. Would it be more arbitrary in the Commission to compel the railroads in the State to give through rates on freight by the card load to any station where they have a side track?

Who consume most of the provisions that are imported into the State? Unfortunately, it is the farmers, and if ten cents per bushel could be saved to them on corn, one dollar per barrel on flour, and one cent per pound on meat, what a great saving it would be in the aggregate.

The Railroad Commission should not legislate to build up cities, but for the "greatest good to the greatest number."

Yours truly,
Merchant.

Adams and Marshall, the two persons arrested on Tuesday night last charged with breaking into a railroad car at Jemison, were discharged after a hearing on yesterday, before Esquire Baker. J. S. Edwards, Esq., represented the R. R. Company, and Col. Robt. H. Knox, the defendant.

Mr. Jack Dicky, who at one time was a prosperous merchant in the lower part of Montgomery county, has been committed to the Chilton county jail for safe keeping, he having been adjudged a lunatic. It seems that the State asylum at Tuscaloosa is too crowded to accommodate more persons than are already confined there.

A finely dressed gentleman was passing a new building, when he was stopped by a negro hod-carrier.

"Say, boss, am you de man dat rub de lecture las' night?"

"I am," was the response.

"Didn't you say dere was a dignity in labor, higher dan anything else a man can know?"

"Yes, I did; and I hope you laid it to heart."

"I did boss. An' didn't you say you loved dignity better'n anything else?"

"I did."

"Well, suppose you take this hod, and try a little dignity on dat sixty feet ladder. I want to go across the street to see a man."

TAKE YOUR COUNTY PAPER.

The Chicago Times delivers this on the county paper:

Do the city papers say anything in regard to your own county? Nothing. Do they contain notices of your schools, meetings, churches, improvements, and hundreds of local matters of interest which your home paper publishes without pay? Not an item. Do they ever say a word calculated to draw attention to your county and aid in its progress and enterprise? Not a line. And there are men who take such contracted views of this matter that unless they are getting as many square inches of reading matter in their own as they do in a city paper, they are not getting the worth of their money. It reminds us of a man who took the largest pair of boots in the box because the price was the same as the pair, much smaller, that fitted him.

SMALL POX AT JEMISON.

It was reported, on last Friday, that there was a case of small pox at Jemison in this county, and Dr. J. P. Robinson, county health officer, was sent for to examine the patient. Dr. Robinson, on return, pronounced it a case of varioloid. Dr. Jerome Cochrane, State health officer, went up to Jemison, on Tuesday, and reported the case to be genuine small pox, but of a mild type, and as it is isolated, no one being allowed to visit it, little danger is apprehended of its spreading. The patient is Mr. S. J. Bowdon, who has been at work on the E. T., Va. & G. railroad, and he thinks he contracted the disease from one of the negroes who left Dunn's camp, near Oxford, soon after the three cases broke out at that camp. Mr. Bowdon has been working with said negro in Shelby county, and thinks he might have caught the disease from the negro's clothing being infected, though nothing has been heard of the negro having taken the disease.

A BLESSING IN DISGUISE.—On every side we hear men say, "this is going to be a mighty hard year on the poor farmers." They have, most of them no provisions on hand to run their farms this year, no money to buy them, and but little, if any credit. This outlook, at the first glance, does seem a gloomy one; but it may be a blessing in disguise, and bear fruit of the richest flavor in the end. If the hard lesson the year shall teach makes the farmers make more at home and spend less abroad, it will be an invaluable one. Most farmers have been just one year behind ever since the war.—How are they ever to catch up and and get even if they do not practice self-denial, and change their farming methods? When they make the food crops the main dependence, and the cotton crops a secondary reliance, they will throw that ugly one year behind clear out of the way, and their progress will then be steady and sure.

Milledgeville Recorder.

A WITTY ANSWER TURNETH AWAY WRATH.

The man who travels on the railroad and sits down by the side of lone females, while laboring under the impression that he recognizes a likeness in their faces to his wife's aunt's cousin, met his match on one of the roads in this vicinity lately. He sat down in the half of a seat, the other half of which was occupied by a pleasant-faced young lady. His first question was:

"Pardon me, Miss, but is your name James? I have a cousin of that name whom you greatly resemble."

"No, sir," was the reply, "my name is not James. But, pardon me, is your name Zink or Copper?"

"Zink or Copper? No, ma'am" said the astonished man. "What led you to suppose I had such a name?"

"Excuse me," was the quiet reply, "but I thought you must be first cousin to a brass foundry."

The man fell over two seats and kicked a bird cage half way down the car in his haste to get into the smoker, while the young lady smiled a gentle smile behind her handkerchief. It was a proof of the old adage that a witty answer turneth away bores.

THE LOVE OF A WOMAN.

Oh! the priceless value of the love of a true woman! Gold cannot purchase a gem so precious. Title and honors confer upon the heart no such serene happiness. In our darkest moments when disappointment and ingratitude, with corroding care, gather thick around, and even gaunt poverty menaces with his skeleton fingers, it gleams around the soul with an angel's smile. Time cannot mar its brilliancy, distance but strengthens its influence, bolts and bars cannot limit its progress; it follows the prisoner into his dark cell, and sweetens the home morsel that appeases his hunger, and in the silence of midnight it plays about his heart, and in his dreams he folds to his bosom the form of her who loves on still, though the world has turned coldly from him. The couch made by the hand of the loved one is soft to the weary limbs of the sick sufferer, and the potion administered by the same hand loses half its bitterness. The pillow carefully adjusted by her brings repose to the feverish brain, and her words of encouragement revive the sinking spirit. It would almost seem that God, compassing woman's first frailty had planted his jewel in her breast, whose heaven-like interests would cast into forgetfulness man's remembrance of the fall, by building up in his heart another Eden, where the perrennial flower ever blooms and crystal waters gush from exhaustless fountains.

MOBILE AND THE CARNIVAL.

We, "un pauvre diable of a country editor," as Charley McCall would express it, took the notion into our Satanic cranium to visit the Gulf City and witness the celebration of the Carnival, the beginning of the Lenten season. The last of the Carnival days, which are the twelve days just preceding Lent, is known as Mardi Gras, or Fat Tuesday, and is celebrated as a Day of Joy, by Their Imperial Majesties, Felix, the Emperor of Joy, and Rex, the King of the Carnival, at Mobile and New Orleans. But we are unable to describe the magnificence of the Gulf City's holiday attire, and so desist.

We will instead, give our readers some interesting information, statistical and otherwise, obtained in an interview with Gen. Jos. W. Burke, Collector of Customs at the Port. Gen. Burke has for seventeen years been a resident of Alabama, and though a Union General during the "late unpleasantness" has long been identified with the interests of Mobile, and of Alabama, and has invested largely in our State. He is a gentleman of affable manners and pleasing address. In reply to the remark sometimes heard that Mobile is a "dead town," he presented figures which go far to disprove its truth.

"One item of her exports—lumber—increased last year three hundred per cent.," says he, "and this year it will double that. Her imports and dues in the fiscal year ending 1878, amounted to $62,000, and at the end of the last fiscal year they reached $179,000."

Gen. Burke says Mobile is more advantageously situated as a coal shipping point than any other United States port, and presented figures showing it to be 200 miles nearer the mines than any other port, and it has the still greater advantage of being nearer tide water. And before five years," says he, "it will be King Coal instead of King Cotton, that will make Mobile one of the greatest cities in the country.

There are many other evidences of Mobile's prosperity, among which is the success of a new Democratic daily, the Chronicle, which has lately been established by the Chronicle Printing Association, with Hon. Leslie E. Brooks, as editor-in-chief. It is a paper of today, and is winning encomiums on all sides. Another institution which Mobile has cause to be proud of is the Barton Academy. It is situated in the heart of the city, has an attendance of 1500 pupils, and is consequently larger than any like institution in the Southern States. With its able and experienced Principal, and his splendid corps of assistants, among whom are to be found a Frazer, a Garrison and a Gilchrist, Barton Academy is an honor to Mobile and to Alabama

Taking Mobile altogether, in its geographical position, commercial advantages and educational facilities, we venture to predict that though it may now be called "a dead town," it will in the near future prove to be the livest corpse, so to speak, ever seen upon the sunny side of terra firma. And "the signs of the times" are certainly indicative of such a result. We would like to say more, but our limited space will not permit. Elsewhere will be found an extract from a letter written to the Mobile Chronicle, from Washington, and which states very plainly the part that Mobile, Birmingham and Alabama are destined to play in the great game of progress, which is now being inaugurated.

THE LAST OF GUITEAU.

Cincinnati, Commercial special: "No one need imagine," said District Attorney Corkhill to-night, "that Guiteau will not hang on the 30th of June. He will. The anniversary of that fateful Saturday night will find him under the dissecting knife. I hear that Scoville has deserted the case and will file no bill of exceptions. Whether he does or not is a matter of no moment at all. The court in banc will grant no new trial. It has practically passed already upon every point that could be presented in any possible bill of exceptions. Every word and every act of Judge Cox during the trial was the result of a conference with all his brethren of the bench. There is nothing to be decided now, and the assassin will never appear in a court room again. His next appearance in public will be on the scaffold."

THE DISCOVERER OF GRANT.

A striking feature of Mr. Fornpy's career in politics and journalism was his discovery of Gen. Grant as Presidential candidate. The suggestion was first made by Mr. Forney in the fall of 1867, just after his return from Europe, where he had been to visit the Paris Exposition of that year, to Chief Justice Carter, of the District of Colorado, and Senator Thayer, of Nebraska. After digesting the idea for a day or two it impressed Mr. Forney favorably, and—but he can tell the story in his own words: "I retired to my rooms on Capitol hill and prepared the five-column article which appeared in the Washington Chronicle and the Philadelphia Press of Nov. 7, 1867. After it was in type Senator Thayer and myself called upon John A. Rawlins, Chief of Gen. Grant's staff, and read it to him. He instantly advised that it should appear the very next day; but I answered that Gen. Grant was not a candidate for President, and did not desire to be, and, if I printed it without authority, there was little doubt that some superserviceable politician would call upon him and ask him if he had been made a candidate with his sanction. He will, of course, reply that he never saw the article until it was in print, and so all your schemes to make him President gang agley. Then Rawlins took it in to Gen. Grant and staid a long time. When he returned he said, 'Gen. Grant is quite pleased with your statement of his political record, and surprised that he proves to be so good a Republican.'" Of course Grant was predestined to be President of the United States, but there can be but little doubt that John W. Forney was one of the most potent instruments in the hands of the fate that shaped the civil career of the great Captain.—Philadelphia Press.

THE question of increasing materially the speed of ocean steamships is now exciting considerable interest in the commercial world. Some time ago M. Raoul-Pictet, the well-known French chemist, undertook at Geneva the construction of an experimental vessel, which was to mark a great stride forward in rapid sailing. Very little is known of his plans, but the mathematical and physical principles involved in the construction of the new ship were recently brought before the French Academy. The vessel will be broad and comparatively flat, and the bottom will constantly receive an upward thrust, tending to raise it out of the water, and diminishing the draught of water in proportion as the speed increases. It will be understood that, beyond a certain velocity, on account of the considerable increase of work expended with this velocity, there may be some advantage in a vertical thrust diminishing the draught; the benefit will be represented by the difference between the excess of work expended to keep up this thrust and the diminution of work resulting from diminution of the immersed surface. M. Pictet calculates that speeds of fifty to sixty kilometres (thirty to thirty-seven miles) an hour may be got thus. At present the average does not exceed eighteen kilometres, or thirteen miles per hour.

LOUIS NAPOLEON'S COURAGE.

September, 1860—I asked Changarnier his opinion of the courage of Louis Napoleon. Changarnier—It is great in theory, small in practice. At Strasbourg, when the regiment on which he depended refused its support, he ran and was found in a state of abject terror hiding under a carriage. In the Boulogne attempt, when he got half way across the Channel he became alarmed, and wished to turn back. The people about him called for champagne, and kept him to his purpose by making him half drunk. As he approached, and no friends appeared, his alarm returned. The first troops that met him were under the command of a sensible old officer, who, when he saw the strange procession, accompanied by the tame eagle, and was told that Louis Napoleon was at its head, instead of joining him, summoned him to surrender. Vaudreuil had said that at Strasbourg Louis Napoleon had not dared even to fire a pistol in his own defense. He recollected this mot, kept a pistol in his hand, and fired at the officer, but his hand shook so that though the man was not five paces off he missed him and wounded a poor cook, who, in his white apron, was standing at a door to see what was going on. Louis Napoleon turned, ran into the sea, and got into a boat. A boat from the shore pulled after him. He gave himself up, begged them not to hurt him, and said that he had 200,000 francs in his pocket which he would give them. He was landed, and begged M. Adam, the Maire, to take the 200,000 francs. Adam said he would take care of them, but, with business-like habits, chose to count them first. It was lucky for him, for, when it was counted in the presence of the crowd, there were found to be only 120,000. This sum when he was on trial before his peers he claimed, and the cruel Government of Louis Phillippe let him have them. Senior—Did he show courage at Magenta? Changarnier—He never crossed the Ticino. He was smoking in a house during the whole time. At Solferino, where he was two miles in the rear, he did not move or give an order, but he smoked fifty-three cigars. We knew this, as he always carries with him little boxes, each of which contains fifty cigars. One was quite exhausted and three had been taken out of the other. Once a spent ball came near him, but that is the only occasion on which he could be considered as under fire. I saw a letter from one of the Cent-Suisses to his mother: "You need be under no anxiety about me. I am with the Emperor, and, therefore, out of danger." In fact, none of them were hit.—Senior's Conversations.

FULLY one-third of the entire railway system of the country is now at the command of Jay Gould. All the railroads in the Southwest belong to him. One of his partners is President of the Union Pacific road. He controls the great Wabash system. He owns a line from the Hudson river to Boston, and in order to secure an unbroken railway connection from the northeastern to the southwestern boundary of the republic, with branches to every leading city in the Union, all he needs is the Delaware and Lackawanna system, which he can easily secure, or the Erie road, which may fall into his possession before many months are over. He owns the elevated system of railways upon which New York so largely depends. But the most enormous power he wields is through his control of the entire telegraphic system of the country. This puts the press and all the markets under his authority. The following list of securities, which are known as the Gould properties, will give some idea of the vast capital which this man directly and indirectly controls:

	Stocks.	Bonds.
Missouri Pacific	$ 30,000,000	$ 24,684,000
Wabash	46,136,400	69,650,000
Missouri, Kansas and Texas	46,405,000	44,893,000
Texas Pacific	25,884,000	37,450,000
New York and New England	20,000,000	8,000,000
Union Pacific	61,000,000	55,518,000
International and Great Northern	7,215,000	13,968,000
Elevated roads	26,000,000	21,500,000
Western Union	80,000,000	4,000,000
Total	$342,640,400	$279,668,000

But this does not tell the whole story. He is interested in barge lines on the Mississippi, in express companies, and is a heavy dealer in stocks like Lake Shore, Erie and Pacific Mail. He owns over $1,000,000 worth of real estate. His indirect influence, of course, is very great, and it is quite safe to credit him with controlling almost absolutely fully one-third of the railway system of the country.

AN innocent-looking young servant girl kept her employer's family in a fright for six months, at Norwich, Conn., by ringing the door bell and rapping on the windows at unreasonable hours. They were sure that a ghost was about, and it was only after watching for twelve nights that a detective solved the mystery.

A Picture Worth Beholding.

Hanging between two small windows, and catching the light from a larger one opposite, in one of the offices of Adams Express Company, at 59 Broadway, N. w. York—the office occupied by Mr. W. H. Hall, head of the delivery department—is a plain finished but neatly framed chromo about 2½ by 3 feet in size, which is looked upon by hundreds of people daily, on many of whom it has a wonderful and salutary effect. It represents a flight of half a dozen rough stone steps leading from the swarded bank of a placid lake to a little rustic temple set in the rugged side of the mountain which rises in stupendous proportions in the background all covered with a rank luxuriant growth of foliage in brush and tree. In the open door of this little temple stands a half concealed figure, with an arm and hand extended, holding forth a small, dimly defined package, while seated on the sward at the foot of the steps an aged pilgrim, barefooted, lame and decrepid, bears a staff in one hand, and in the other holds before his dim eyes a small bottle, whose label he eagerly scans. This label bears the words "St. Jacobs Oil the Great German Remedy." Simple as this little chromo appears in its unostentatious position, it has an influence which it would be difficult to estimate. "It is to that picture and the persuasions of Mr. Hall," said Mr. Edward J. Douglass, a gentleman connected with Mr. Hall's department, "that I owe my present ability to perform my work. Some weeks ago I was violently attacked with sciatic rheumatism, and hour by hour I grew worse, and nothing my family or the doctor could do gave me any relief. I began to think in a few days that my case was hopeless and that I was doomed to be an invalid and helpless cripple for life. But at last I thought of that picture which I had so often looked at with but little interest, and then Mr. Hall came to my bedside, and telling me how St. Jacobs Oil had cured him of a worse and longer standing case than mine, urged me to use the same remedy. I did so that very night, directing my wife not to spare it but to apply it thoroughly according to the directions; this she did with a large piece of flannel cloth saturated with the Oil, and then bound the cloth to the affected parts. The next morning I was free from pain, and although a little sore in the hip, was able to dress myself, and the next day resumed my duties in the office as sound as a dollar. Here I am now in full health and strength, having had no touch of rheumatism or other pain since. Whenever I see one of our drivers or any other person who shows any symptoms of lameness or stiffness, I point him to the picture in Mr. Hall's office, and then direct him to go for St. Jacobs Oil at once."—N. Y. Evening Telegram.

A MUCH-LITIGATED steer case, which had excited West Brattleboro, Vt., and employed the county's heavy legal talent to settle the important question whether hair would grow on a clipped bovine's tail, resulted in a disagreement of the jury; and then the litigants settled it between themselves without disclosing their solution of the question.

"Do Likewise."

DR. R. V. PIERCE, Buffalo, N. Y.:—"Five years ago I was a dreadful sufferer from uterine troubles. Having exhausted the skill of three physicians, I was completely discouraged, and so weak I could with difficulty cross the room alone. I began taking your 'Favorite Prescription' and using the local treatment recommended in your 'Common Sense Medical Adviser.' In three months I was perfectly cured. I wrote a letter to my family paper, briefly mentioning how my health had been restored, and offering to send the full particulars to any one writing me for them and inclosing a stamped envelope for reply. I have received over four hundred letters. In reply, I have described my case and the treatment used, and earnestly invited them to 'do likewise.' From a great many I have received second letters of thanks stating that they had commenced the treatment and were much better already."

LUCY HAMILTON HOOPER writes from Paris to the Cincinnati Enquirer: "It is really amazing to find how little is known about the United States in France. A Colonel in the French army once asked me, with a polite peroration respecting the vast size of my native land, if the United States were not twice as large as France. 'We have one State,' I answered, 'that is as large as France' (I meant Texas), 'and there are forty States in the Union.' The old gentleman looked at me with an expression that said, as plainly as words could have done, 'This woman is lying to me most abominably, but I will be polite and will not let her see that I know she is lying.' So he made some vaguely-civil remark, and changed the conversation. Yet this intelligent military man prided himself on having crossed the Atlantic and visited the United States—that is to say, New Orleans."

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: "In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleedings of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as half a dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with diseased lungs will take DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I can positively say it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness."

What a Three-Cent Stamp Will Do.

It will do more than any other piece of paper of its size and value in the world. It accomplishes what would, a few years ago, have been deemed impossible. That talismanic placard on the corner of an envelope of package commands the use of capacious and beautiful buildings wherein to receive your letters, orders trains of cars to carry them, and starts an army of men to deliver them. It brings information from every section of the country and tidings of pleasure as well. But the crowning consideration is the fact that a three-cent stamp sent to A. VOGELER & Co., Baltimore, Md., with the applicant's name and address, will procure a copy of ST. JACOBS Calendar, replete with interesting reading matter, and, better than all, containing specific instructions for the treatment and cure of rheumatism, neuralgia and all painful diseases by the use of ST.

JACOBS OIL. Concerning the efficacy of this wonderful substance, the following must impress the reader:—Hon. Thomas L. James, Postmaster-General of the United States, when Postmaster of the City of New York, concurred in the following testimonial from Wm. H. Wareing, Esq., Asst. General Superintendent Third Division Mailing and Distributing Department, New York Post-office: "I take pleasure in advising that the samples of ST. JACOBS OIL left for distribution among the clerks of this office, have, as far as they have been tried, proved equal to all that is claimed for the OIL. The reports from the several superintendents and clerks who have used the OIL agree in praising it highly. It has been found efficacious in cuts, burns, soreness and stiffness of the joints and muscles, and affords a ready relief for rheumatic complaints." Col. Samuel H. Taylor, Washington, Ind., and ex-Postmaster of Cumberland, Md., was cured of rheumatism by ST. JACOBS OIL.

HOPE.

Little word so full of meaning,
How you brighten many a way;
Help the toiler in his gleaning,
Making sad hearts often gay.

Mistakes of life which bring us sorrow
Are made lighter far to bear,
With a hope of a brighter morrow,
When the skies shall be all fair.

When rough trials crowd life's pathway,
And our days are dark and drear,
Then this one word casts its bright ray,
And to sad heart brings comfort dear.

Hope shines forth to guide us onward;
Makes us battle hard with fate;
Gives us courage to push forward;
Makes us strong to watch and wait.

The blackest clouds but hide the sunshine;
Look beyond and see the light.
There's future pleasures in the Glad Sometime.
Live on, and hope for days more bright.

CANNON AIDING.

Whene'er a youthful lover
His courting has big gun,
Howitzer prizes him to learn
That 'tis not always fun.

For instance, when he's planned his siege,
And thinks the missile do,
The girl's distrustful parent
Shows him a trigger two.

And as with much momentum
He down the steps doth glide,
And on the picket fence doth land,
He feels much mortar-fied.

The maiden in the meantime
Escapes into the yard,
And shrieks, with much emotion,
"My pa has struck Petard."

The young man thinks it over,
And, though he'll not declare it,
Concludes, since he can't bullet,
That he will have to bear it.

Y SPIRITUELLE "SPOTTER."

ne, two, three—yes, I was sure that ad traced a family resemblance in e very different faces, during the e day, and that these faces had re- ed themselves at intervals during a od of several days.

happened in this wise. I was con- scent — recovering from nervous r, which had rendered my imagina- powers morbid, and so shattered nervous system that it was necessary ecover it by the mildest means and slowest stages. I durst not walk so I was recommended to ride. h reading, even of the lightest char- r, was declared one of the worst gs possible for me; so my young nds got up private theatricals for my fit, and, though I was forbidden as o take a public part in them, it gave nfinite amusement to aid them in r preparations. By degrees I be- e quite an artist in the necessities successful "make-up;" could de- at a glance, whether the eyebrows ired encouragement, or whether the were of a shade to stand a narrow severe touch of rouge immediately ath them. I could tell at a single whether the whiteness of a false plexion was due to flake-white, bis- , or alternate layers of camphor-ice powder; and probably no one ever ered more repeatedly the question, ve I too much on to-night?" That ame the criterion in such matters one of the piquant recompenses I for not being in a position just then e part in the public performances.

ave said that I was interdicted from walking. This drove me to the passenger-cars, for I could not af- the daily luxury of a carriage. is one of my idiosyncrasies l it a weakness, if you will— having once got into a track, hard to drive me out of it. equently I acquired the habit of g up and down the same city pas- r track—which one is not necessary articularize—several times a day.

one of these occasions I found lf occupying a corner of the car onal to one that was in possession lovely, spirituelle blonde.

very fair, pure blonde! And what exquisite sight is there on earth that of a white-rose-skinned, vio- ed girl, with face framed in with entanglements of light-golden This was the style of a beauty encountered me in that passenger nd whispered to me that my des- was at hand.

was about 9 o'clock in the morning, e were alone in the car. She took otice of me at all, nor indeed of ing but the school book she held in her lap. I noticed that the con- r looked at her from time to time, an expression which might have t a good deal had I in the least sus- d the truth, or met a case resem- it before. The young lady stopped r in the neighborhood of a large rick building, which I took to be a g ladies' seminary, and got out ut betraying a consciousness of xistence, from which I opined that she was afraid of being late for school and didn't know her lesson.

At about 2 o'clock in the afternoon I found myself riding up-town in the same car. The lack of other means of amusement had rendered me a close observer, and consequently when the car stopped and a woman's-rights-looking woman got in, apparently a spinster of uncertain age, my looks were riveted upon her, and, in spite of the difference in age, attire, manner and everything which constitutes personality, I exclaimed to myself:

"Heavens! what a strange family resemblance! I could swear this woman's-rights-looking woman was the maiden aunt of my spirituelle blonde. Those eyes, that nose, that chin"—and thereupon I sank off into a retrospective reverie which lasted until I found I had been driven six blocks past the paternal residence, and reflected that the dinner had by that time probably grown unpalatably lukewarm.

The mystery was not at an end yet. That same evening at about 8 I took another ride, which was to last me until next morning. Being again the sole occupant of the car, I was about to solve the problem how great a portion of my body could repose upon the velvet-cushioned seat without an impingement of my dusty feet thereon, when the car stopped. I heard the conductor exclaim: "All right, aunty," and the next moment there ambled in a middle-aged woman, who seated herself, painfully and with heavy breathing, opposite. She wore a thick veil, but my eyes were sharpened by much observation, and, for the second time that day, I exclaimed to myself:

"Heavens! what a resemblance!" and fell back on the old work of comparing eyes, chin and nose with those of my spirituelle blonde of the morning.

Yes; the family resemblance was there—there was no disguising that. If the woman's-rights woman had been the spinster aunt, this woman was the dowager mother. Mixing with it all there was a confusion, a mystery, a contradiction and defiance, which I tried in vain to understand or remove. Why, of all the faces I had seen that day, these three should flit before me, weaving themselves together, growing out of one another like monstrous heads, alternating each with incessant repetition, and mingling their identities like objects reflected infinitely in opposite mirrors, was the most inexplicable question of all.

I dreamed about those faces all that night. They grew out of my bed-posts; they hid themselves in the folds of my mosquito net; they sprouted from my neck and flashed before me like a fabled monster, and when I woke in the morning 'twas as though they had divided my appetite between them, for I certainly had none for breakfast.

So wearisome had grown this constant brooding that, in despair, I went to my doctor, and, conquering my fear of being laughed at, stated the case.

My doctor is an eccentric. He is not an old fogy. He is a young progressive, with respect for past good, but with greater respect for future better. He believes in phrenology, and he reads the newspapers, consequently he knows a thing or two which more celebrated physicians might search in their books for in vain.

He did not laugh at me. He did not feel my pulse. He did not ask me to go through the farce of putting out my tongue. But he felt of my individuality, and then he asked me the very singular question:

"Do you know what a 'spotter' is?"

I pondered for a few moments, and then pensively shook my head. I was not excessively green in city life, but I did not know what a "spotter" was, and so I said:

"I thought, perhaps, I was a little out of my head," I added. "Sometimes I fancy my fever jarred me there terribly. And I have been so haunted by these three faces. You don't know—"

At this point, for the first time, the doctor interrupted me with a hearty laugh.

"I do know all, my dear fellow," he said, slapping me on the shoulder. "Nothing's the matter there," touching my head. "Your being 'haunted,' as you call it, with those three faces, on the contrary, is one of the best proofs that you are all right. Take your customary ride to-day. Ten chances to one but you will encounter the same three faces. When you do, get as close to them as possible, and, if your eyes are not strong enough, borrow a pair of eye-glasses. Report the result of your observations to me, and if, by that time, you don't know what a 'spotter' is, I will tell you."

I rose to go, with returned cheerfulness.

"One word more," he said, holding out his hand as I stood on the threshold. "You are not in love with your violet-eyed blonde?"

"Ah! She is very beautiful," I answered, turning away; "and I think—I don't know—but I think I am in love," and, disappearing amid the doctor's merry peal of laughter, I went on my mysterious quest.

It was several days ere I called on the doctor again. When I did so it was with a clear head, but a heart not altogether light. I had pursued my investigations closely in the interim, and was now going to him with the result.

"And what have you to report?" he asked.

"The girl," I replied, "has genuine, unassisted beauty, and I pity her from the bottom of my heart that she is obliged to earn her living in such a way. Her spinster aunt is admirably got up, but I noticed that the way she counts is by turning down a leaf of the book she carries for every fresh passenger that gets in. The old lady is the greatest success of all. She takes her notes by pretending to figure her grocer's account in a greasy blank-book. But they are all three first-class 'spotters,' and do their business well."

"And pray, my friend," asked the doctor, "how did you arrive at a comprehension of the deep significance of that term?"

"My own eager eyes and senses informed me," I replied. ("You are pretty well cured," I heard the doctor mutter half aloud.) "A 'spotter,' usually a female, is an employe in the secret service of a passenger railway company. Her duty is to 'spot' dishonest conductors, and report them to the directors of this company. These women, whom I have seen, are all 'spotters,' regular artists in the work."

"And how about the family resemblance?"

"The same face," I replied, "bears an extraordinary family resemblance in itself, when seen in a number of clever disguises. I have said these women are artists and do their work well. But there is only one woman in the case! My spirituelle blonde is nothing but a spirituelle 'spotter,' and my violet-eyed beauty, my spinster aunt and my dowager mother are one and the same person. I brushed near her with the eye of a hawk. I saw the paint and patches and powders. It is the best 'make up,' on or off the stage, I ever witnessed. But I think one or two of the conductors, from the way they looked at her, are a little suspicious; and I suspect my lady will soon be obliged to 'spot' on another line."

From that hour my convalescence was rapid, and I ride less than formerly in city passenger railway cars.

YOU CAN DO YOUR BEST.

President Tuttle, of Wabash College, closed his Baccalaureate with words of inspiriting counsel to the graduating class. We commend them to all young men who may chance to read them:

"For several years you have been working for the honors of graduation. As you reach the coveted goal, you meet the crowds of the unemployed. The case is not one to inspire hope. Is there anything you can do about it? There is something you cannot do—you cannot change the fact. In spite of your wishes, the professions are overcrowded, or at least seem to be. But there is something you can do—you 'can do your best!' and that is something.

"A select few do it. Thousands do not. We sometimes speak of aristocracies. Those based on wealth and family are not the noblest of the class. This aristocracy, composed of those who 'do their best,' is the noblest. The professions are not overcrowded with this sort, but with the other. To be this sort of a man—one that 'does his best'—is as easy as to be a Milo, a Michael Angelo, or a Paul. Do you grant it? What then? This. In that difficult but splendid personal trait (if you have it) you have the strong presumption—I had almost said prophecy—of success. The man who 'does his best' has a passport, sealed with the King's signet, to some worthy field. There certainly is a place somewhere for such a man."

A MAN at Rome, Ga., felt that the best interests of the country demanded that he should attend a circus, then in town, but he had no money. He accordingly went to a merchant, bought a dollar's worth of coffee on credit, sold it for 75 cents in cash, and went to the show with as much unconcern as the man who had got a $25 bill changed to buy a ticket.

THE RACE IS ALWAYS TO THE SWIFT.

Night in a great city. The wind surged and moaned with a mournful cadence through the leafless trees that stood like gaunt specters of the night, ever and anon bending low their withered trunks and great black branches as if in mute appeal to the storm king to not prostrate them forever with his cold, merciless breath.

Adown a street where gleamed the bright lights of wine bibbers' haunts, and the baleful glare of the oyster saloon fell upon the sidewalk, a young man strode with quick, nervous step and a wistful, haunting look in his eye. At a corner where the crowd of eager, jostling pedestrians was thickest he paused and looked anxiously around. The soft, low tinkle of a bell was heard. Clasping a bruised nickel in his left hand, the young man stepped briskly forward, saying softly to himself: "My heart has not deceived me; I am in time."

* * * * * * * *

In the elegantly-furnished parlor of a handsome residence, a tall and radiantly-beautiful girl sat silently in front of a grate fire, the flames from which leaped lightly up the chimney and cast a ruddy glow on all that came within the range of their lambent beams. Cleopatra McGuire was the only daughter of a father who fairly idolized the proud beauty who presided over his household with such stately grace—his wife having fallen into a wash-tub and been drowned within two years of their marriage.

"Which shall I choose?" said the girl, in soft, mellow tones. Shall it be the strong-limbed Rupert with his proud Saxon pedigree, or Adelbert, who would deck his bride in jewels? My heart tells me that, with Rupert ever by my side, life would always seem a pleasant dream. I love him with a wild, passionate devotion that time can never change. But Adelbert is rich and powerful. As his wife I should shine in society. Oh, me! Which shall it be?"

Suddenly rising from the fauteuil, she said: "I have decided. To him who gets here first this evening will I plight my troth. Fate shall decide."

* * * * * * * *

The Van Buren street car was slowly wending its way westward. On the sidewalk came with firm tread a sunny-haired young man—Rupert Gilhooley. Suddenly there fell upon the air the clangor of a bell. Rupert broke into a run. The bridge began to open. He succeeded in getting across. The car did not. In the rear left-hand corner of that car sat Adelbert Quirk.

Fate had begun work.

* * * * * * * *

After crossing the bridge Rupert did not slacken his pace, and was soon well toward the end of his journey, when the pitiful crying of a child attracted his attention. He stopped, and, finding that the little waif had lost its way, waited patiently till a policeman came up, unto whose care he confided the wanderer.

By this time the bridge was closed, and the car was thundering on its way, the horses lashed into their best speed by the driver, who was anxious to make up for lost time. Just as Rupert gave the child to the policeman the car caught up with him. He had but half a mile to go. Walking leisurely along, he reached the residence of Stuyvesant McGuire, and as the door opened Cleopatra fell into his arms with a glad cry.

"Fate has brought you to me, my darling," she said. "You must never leave me again."

An hour later the door-bell rang, and Adelbert Quirk was informed by the hired girl that Miss McGuire was not at home.

Rupert had outwalked the horse-car.—Chicago Tribune.

STAINED GLASS.

In 1370 there was celebrated at Tegernsee, Bavaria, the 900th anniversary of the stained-glass factory there. For a period, a dark age in art, the method of staining was lost, and its revival is thus explained. An Englishman, bargaining at Nuremburg early in this century for some fragments of old stained glass, remarked before one Siegmund Frank, a cabinet varnisher, that there was a fortune for any one who could revive the lost art. Frank took the hint, and got the sympathy of the Government. In 1845 an establishment was opened at Munich, under Mr. Ainmuller, who had been associated with Frank, which has become world famous. Within recent years England has rivaled Munich in this art industry.

READING THEIR SPEECHES.

It seems impossible for Senators to make speeches any more. They are impelled by some horrible and resistless force to write essays. The idea that any one can be convinced by a speech has gone out of fashion.

The essays are intended for publication in the newspapers and the Record, in order that the author's constituents may know that he remains true to his "principles." Many vigorous men have been deluded into adopting the vicious habit. Even Blaine was gradually becoming a captive, and his best friends were wishing that he could be taken back into the House by some fortunate freak of politics, in order that he might again assume his place among the strong men of Congress.

The absence of Conkling leaves Edmunds about the only strong man on either side who has enough confidence in himself to get on his legs and talk an hour or two as though he really were talking to the Senate and not to the country. The loss of Conkling is a sad one in this respect. He certainly added to the vigor of the Senate, and visitors to the gallery, who all dislike written speeches, will miss the entertainment which the New York Senator was accustomed to provide for them. Even Beck has fallen into the practice, and reads his speeches. It is impossible for him, however, to suppress his zealous Scotch nature, and it is very funny to see him bouncing up and down and gesticulating with his clenched fist, while he is bent almost double in the attempt to decipher his manuscript. Beck can not help the gesticulation, but he can help the manuscript, and he ought to throw it away. At present his performances are very much like those of the dumb orator. A placid man, in whose face there is no expression (because nothing is in view but the face and top of his head) and whose eye can not be seen, utters the word to the accompaniment of poundings and contortions that apparently have no connection whatever with the speaker. It don't do to have a gentleman get excited over manuscript that he can not read very well.

Imagine a man leaning down so that his head almost touches his desk, wetting his thumb and tearing over page after page to find the lost one in which is written the sentence he had begun, while all the while the disengaged hand, closely clenched, is pounding the circumambient air. "I say, sir, etc., etc. I say, sir, etc., etc. Sir, I say, etc., etc." Why do Senators who are members of this legislative body, for the purpose, presumably, of attending to the public business, waste themselves in this absurd way? Senator Vest was just saved by timely advice from abandoning oratory to become an essayist. He had announced his intention of making a speech on a certain morning, and then, for the first time in his life, wrote out what he had to say. He privately confessed afterward that, though the essay was a charming piece of literary work, it would have been a dead failure. Some Senator who happened to know the Missouri Senator's gift for speaking, passed behind his desk and noticed the huge pile of manuscript.

"Vest, are you going to be such a fool as to read your speech?" said he.

"Well, I find it's the custom," answered Vest, "and I don't want to insult the Senate by breaking into the established order of things."

"Custom be blowed," said the rude but wise man; "give me that manuscript, and then stand up on your legs and talk to 'em like a man." Upon this the other Senator snatched up Vest's manuscript and carried it off, leaving the Missourian to make an extemporaneous speech.

"Was it as good as the written one, Senator?"

"A sight better," was the confession.

IN a recent lecture Congressman (Sunset) Cox says that while he was on the Nile, the boatmen, who were devout Mohammedans, would lose their reckoning, and, not knowing the points of compass, would not know in what direction Mecca lay, toward which they must turn their faces in prayer. Having a compass with him, Mr. Cox good-naturedly corrected their bearings for them, and not infrequently had the honor of running a Moslem prayer meeting. They always passed, of course, a vote of thanks for the able manner in which he conducted their religious services. If he had wanted it they would probably have made a dervish of him.

PLEASANTRIES.

LINES ON A PLUMBER.

Most modest of men is the plumber—
No rival has he save the drummer;
Though the world e'er maligns,
Yet he never resigns,
And thriveth in winter and summer.
Give him but an order to plumb,
And his bill straightway reaches a sum
That depletes your exchequer—
Would equip a three-decker—
And makes you most awfully glum.

PARAPETS—Twins.

NEVER known to get tired—Outstanding debts.

NOT suitable for a clothes line—A cord of wood.

BOUND to make a man cross—Getting to the other side of the street.

AMBITIOUS man—"Is there any fixed rule for writing poetry?" There is. Don't.

LANDLUBBERS "double the horn" oftener than sailors do, and yet the latter come up groggy.

ONE can't be too careful with firearms. A boy carried a pistol in his coat-pocket, and one day, while he was in swimming, the pistol unexpectedly went off. He has no suspicions as to who took it.

THE manner in which Connecticut courts and juries are run has provoked criticism from every State in the Union. A man who commits murder in that State has got to own it and prove it before a jury will believe it.

A GENTLEMAN was complaining that he had invested a large sum of money in Wall street and lost it. A sympathizing friend asked him whether he had been a bull or a bear; to which he replied: "Neither; I was a jackass!"

COLLEGE Professor—"Can we see an intangible object?" Pupil—"Yes, sir." Professor—"Eh? What do you mean? Cite your authorities." Pupil—"Shakspeare, sir. See Hamlet's advice to the players when he speaks of those who saw the air."

READING a list of the names of candidates for the General Court, one gentleman asked another, "Ben, who is this man? I don't seem to recall him to mind." "Why," replied Ben, "you know him. He goes to our church, but he never comes."

"IS THERE any opening here for an intellectual writer?" asked a seedy, red-nosed individual of an editor. "Yes, my friend," replied the man of quills, "a considerate carpenter, foreseeing your visit, left an opening for you. Turn the knob to the right."

PROFESSOR (to student)—"You wish me to give you a recommendation? I don't remember ever having seen you at any of my lectures." Student—"Ah, Professor, you evidently confound me with another man who looks very much like me, and who, it is true, has never attended your lectures." Professor—"Yes, yes, very likely." (Gives him the recommendation.)

NO TIDINGS have been received of Mr. Powell, the member of Parliament who recently made a balloon ascension in England, and, to the horror of the spectators, floated out over the sea. There have been several instances where men who have approached a similar fate have been rescued, but almost all hope of his safety has been abandoned. In 1874 two French aeronauts, M. Durouf and his wife, were carried out to sea from near Calais, and were not heard of for four days, when they were landed at Great Grimsby by a North Sea fishing smack, which had rescued them after they had given themselves up for lost; and a man named Saddler, whose balloon was blown out over the Irish channel twenty years ago, was rescued by a sloop. Drowning is one of the great dangers an aeronaut runs the risk of, if he ascends in the vicinity of a large body of water. Thirty years ago the body of an Italian who went up from Copenhagen was found washed ashore on a small island off the coast, and the case of Mr. Donaldson, who was drowned in Lake Michigan, will be remembered.

DURING the year just closed one house in Boston sent to Ireland 14,615 drafts, amounting to $150,500. Not one of the number exceeded £10, and very few reached that value. The same house sold 1,011 passage tickets, the value of which was $25,071. Nine-tenths of the money was sent by girls, principally domestics.

Some of the newspapers of the State are giving Gov. Cobb and Warden Bass "hail Columbia," on account of the management, or rather mismanagement, of the penitentiary convicts. The principle agitator seems to be the Selma Daily Times, which proposes "to fight it out on this line if it takes all summer." The chief complaint is that great injustice is done in the convict law making no distinction between those sentenced for misdemeanors and those for greater crimes. A prisoner sentenced for a minor offence is hired to contractors and compelled to do the same work that is given to a burglar or a prisoner sentenced for manslaughter.

TO THE FARMERS.

We have announced an early, open spring, with good weather for all practical purposes. What we wish to say now, as our announcement will not be published in time for the farmers of the South, is that early planting will win this year. A close, hot summer is anticipated by us, and what should be insured is an early, vigorous growth before the hot weather sets in. Frost or no frost, farmers must take some risks of spasmodic spells. There is not enough snow and ice this side of Canada to do us in the South much harm this spring by cold descents.—Prof. G. R. Cather in Ashville Ægis.

A Russian journal, published in St. Petersburg, and quoted by the Paris Univers, comments satirically on the burst of sympathy, British sympathy, for the Jews in Russia. The writer of the article, who ought to be an Irishman, if he is not, recommends the Irish to become Jews! In that case, he thinks they would secure the sympathy which the English are now so lavishly bestowing on the persecuted Hebrews. "Poor Irish! why are you not Jews?" he asks. "We do not," he continues, "know whether the proposal made by General Ignatieff, in a recent interview with the English Ambassador, be authentic or not, but we willingly give it. 'Let the English,' said the General, 'take our Jews, and give us their Irish. We will even give them, if they like, ten Jews for one Irishman.'"

IS BRIGHAM YOUNG STILL ALIVE?

OMAHA, March 2.—A man from Salt Lake, visiting in this city, in the course of an animated conversation on the anti-Mormon movement, said that he believed that Brigham Young was still alive. He said that he saw the body which was supposed to be that of the Mormon leader, and while it might have borne some slight resemblance to that of Brigham Young, it was in reality that of some other man. He said he knew of a hundred Latter Day Saints who also failed to recognize the body as that of Young He had heard Brigham Young often predict that he should be resurrected from the dead; and he firmly believes that when the crisis arrives in the affairs of the Mormons, the resurrection dodge will be played upon the ignorant, superstitious and fanatical people who compose the Mormon Church This cunning plan will be in keeping with the various tricks and pretensions that have characterized the Mormon Church since its inception. Brigham Young, a shrewd and far-seeing man, knew that the day was not far off when a vigorous crusade will be made upon the Mormon Church, and he adopted the resurrection game, to be put into operation at a time when the people shall need something in the shape of a miracle to firmly cement them together and fight to maintain the principles of faith.

The man who made these statements is a Mormon, but not a polygamist. He is what is termed a Josephite or a believer in the true Mormon Church, founded by Joseph Smith, and he denies with all Josephites that polygamy was ever a part of the Mormon faith preached by Smith. He is extensively engaged in business in Utah, and is regarded as a man of sound judgment and veracity. While here he visited some of the Omaha Josephites, and it was to them that he made the revelation of the plan by which Brigham Young is to create the greatest sensation of modern times. He had many business dealings with Young, and was intimately acquainted with him. He asserts that with a complete organization and secret workings of the Church, it would be an easy matter to keep Brigham Young concealed for almost any length of time, and reproduce him when most needed to revive the faith of believers by his apparent resurrection. That this resurrection would be taken as a matter of fact there is no doubt, and the superstitious people would follow the prophet's banner with the zeal of fanatics, and shed their blood in its defence.

This Josephite's statement is to some extent confirmed by a retired army officer who was on the most friendly and intimate terms with Brigham Young. This officer, who viewed the alleged remains of Young, has, it is said, made the assertion that they did not bear the least resemblance to Brigham Young.

A MODEL POLITICAL PRIMER.

Philadelphia Times Washington Letter.

Sitting in the galleries and gazing upon our gathered wisdom and demagoguism, I have prepared a short political primer, which I propose to introduce into the common schools. The following are sample chapters, which are from the advance sheets:

"What is this on the Man's breast; Is it a Dog check; No; it is a med-al. It is made of bronze. What is this on the med-al? It is '306.' What does 306 mean? This 306 means that the Man is a charter member of the present Ad-min-is-tra-tion. Why does the Man wear the dog check? Be-cause He is brave. Was He a brave Man? O, yes; a very brave man. He was one of 306 who voted — times for Grant at Chi-cago by or-der of the Oth-er Man. Yes, yes; He is a brave Man. He is Al-so Glad, Why is the man with the Dog-check glad; Be-cause he will Now get an of-fice. Does every man who wears A Dog-check get an of-fice; Yes. Every one not Dead or in Jail.

"O, see the man With a red Head! He is a Boss. He don't Look like a Big man. But He is. A Boss is a Man who runs things. He is a Good man to have In the House. Sometimes the Boss' gets mad. Then He swears. Have you seen a Boss Mad? Say Post Office to This one and then you will pinch his Leg. This Boss has two legs and Two Votes. He is a Great man. The President asks Him what To Do. His party asks Him what to Do. His State leans up a-gainst Him. He is Boss. If he should die things Would stop so Quick it Would snap Your Head off.

"Look at the Fat man smile! Who is the fat Man, and why Does he smile? The fat man Is Da-vid. He smiles be-cause He has No Par-ty and gets All the plums. He is in The tree. The Man with a Par-ty is On the ground and Can only Have such plums as are Thrown to him. The fat Man roosts High and will not Come down Un-less he can be Presi-dent. The Men with a Par-ty on the Ground hate Da-vid, but they would Make him Presi-dent to get More plums. They are Nice men.

"What is this? It is a Stal-Wart Is it Alive? It is. It is Very much alive. Does it feel Sad? No, no; it Is not Sad—it is drunk with Joy, and is glad Of it. It wears A collar. It is a Brass collar. What is on The collar? '306.' Why does it wear a Collar? Because it wants a Post Office. Does every Stal-wart Want a Post Office? No. Only those which do Not have a Post Of-fice Al-ready. Can every Stal-wart get a Post Office? If it cannot, it will shoot a President and Have a New deal. See How Sad the Man looks! What makes him So Sad? He is Sad because He made Garfield President. What makes him so small? O, it is Sor-row. He was once Large and a great many of Him. Now Grief has Got Him. He gets small-er Every day. Next week He can't Be found.

"Who is the man in a White hat? He is a G. M. What is a G. M.? A G. M. is a Con-gress-man and means a great Man. He makes laws and Is in-spired by the De-ity. He can make water run up Hill by law. A post-office in his District gives Him more Trouble. There is only one thing he Can't do; that is, put Ten Men in one Office. If he could do that He would be pleased.

MR. EDITOR:—Will you, or some one of your numerous readers please inform us whether an incorporated town, situated in a beat where prohibition has been voted since its incorporation is included in such prohibition, and oblige

CONSTANT READERS.

Common intelligence, we think, would give as a reply to the above, that if the sale of whiskey is prohibited from a beat, it is prohibited from any and every part of that beat, unless the prohibitory law especially provides for its sale in certain portions of the beat, and in such case it would not be prohibited, but only partially prohibited from such beat. If our enquirers wish to get legal authority, a competent attorney is the proper person to get such information from, and from that source, they may be able to get a suitable reply, for, in the language of another "it is a mighty poor lawyer that can't produce an argument on either side of a question." But, whatever may be the opinions of the lawyers in the matter, we will say for the benefit of "Constant Readers" and the public at large, that so far as Clanton beat is concerned, the whiskey business is as dead as an Egyptian mummy, and it will be as easy to revive it as it would be for such mummy to swim the Hellespont with a ten ton cannon lashed to its back.

CHILTON COUNTY.

SOME OF ITS RESOURCES, CAPABILITIES, &C., AS SHOWN BY AN OBSERVANT CITIZEN.

DIXIE STATION, ALA., Mar. 3.

ED. CHILTON VIEW: Dear Sir—Our county, so long unknown, is gradually coming into notice, and being appreciated by the outside world. In this valley of Big Mulberry our fine ranges of timber are being brought into service, and in the last eighteen months three large lumber mills have been erected almost in sight of this station and a fourth will probably be commenced in a few weeks. Agents from Michigan have been here prepared to purchase large bodies of land. More than this, we have numerous fertile valleys with thousands of acres of fine arrable land now lying untouched by the plow. No more inviting field can be found by the settler or immigrant in search of a cheap and healthy home. The fabulously low price of farming lands might induce strangers to believe the soil to be sterile and unproductive. Such is not true, however. One of my neighbors last year made 800 bushels of rice, which was admitted yesterday, by the provision dealers in Selma, to be equal to anything they could obtain in Carolina.

Our hills are rich in iron ore, as to the quality of which I cannot speak; but the mineral resources are yet to be developed. A very large deposit, I am informed is now being opened along the Coosa river, which is now reached by a branch railroad, and, to my profound astonishment, I learn that it is proposed to convey the ore to Birmingham, instead of erecting a furnace on the spot, near vast forests and fine timber, which would furnish ample coaling grounds that are scarce at Birmingham. If this is not sending coal to Newcastle, it is certainly going to a great deal of trouble and expense to send a valuable mineral far from the point where it could be most cheaply and conveniently converted into the most useful and indeed indispensable of metals, for which a ready market offers abundant promise.

Allow me, again to refer to our cheap farming lands where we have every advantage of pure water, perfect health, numerous streams and springs, abundant water power, unlimited range for stock, and where we raise corn, oats, rye, wheat, cotton, rice, sugar cane (not Sorghum) all root and garden crops, two of Irish potatoes, in one season, all fruits except tropical, cattle, hogs and sheep without winter shelter, on land at one dollar an acre!

We have a quiet, hospitable neighborhood. You cannot stop at the wrong house, or get a bad supper or a bad bed. DIXIE.

P. S.—Let me mention that a family of seven whites from Arkansas, and one of six from the sea coast of Georgia, are here, perfectly satisfied with their move, and say Dixie will be their home for life.

MERIDIAN, MISS., March 3.

Bob. Jones, white, and Bill Miller, colored, were hanged at Aberdeen at 12 o'clock to-day for the murder of three brothers named Walker, near that place, on the 26th of November last. Both died instantly, their necks being broken by the fall. Jones fainted while the rope was being adjusted. Miller said he expected to go straight to heaven and commenced to sing in a sad wailing voice. Life was extinct in 12 minutes, and the bodies were cut down 8 minutes later.

INFLUENCE.

Upon her harp the maiden lays her hands;
A moment only are they still,
Then wander forth among the chords and form
Soft harmonies without her will.
What tones will vibrate 'neath her fingers' touch
She knows not till their sounds betray;
Sweet, fervid thoughts expressed in music's voice
Lie far beyond the fingers' play—
The soul, that part immortal, lists and learns
The melody of heavenly strain
And when the soul is filled with song, the hands
Impelled, repeat the rich refrain.

In daily life 'tis thus with thoughts and deeds;
If mind be filled with purpose true,
And heart, with love and purity—therefrom
The bravest, noblest acts ensue.
And like melodious sounds upon the ear
Of list'ner, thrilling e'en his soul,
A holy life's restraining power falls,
And virtues wake 'neath its control.

There is a considerable boom in the saw mill business here. There are two here now and another is to be erected soon by Messrs. Gregory & Coe, of Selma.

Our farmers are late in their preparations for planting, but we are glad to note that there are few mortgages and no guano this year.

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
AND SPERMATORRHŒA.

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

THIS year the Irish farmers are sending cargoes of potatoes to the western ports of Great Britain. Moreover, a considerable quantity of Irish potatoes is being shipped to the United States. Scotch and German potatoes are also being shipped to the United States. Scotch regents are very scarce in all the wholesale markets of the North, and champions are plentiful; champions are not liable to disease, whereas the best East Lothian regents have suffered considerably from it.

EX-PRESIDENT HAYES is spending much of his time reading over the scrap-books made by one of his clerks, who, during his four years of the Presidency, spent his entire time in reading the newspapers and clipping out everything that was said about the President and his family, good, bad and indifferent. These scrap-books fill a large library, and are a feature of curious interest. Mr. Hayes is reported to enjoy the reading of them very much.

PRESIDENT ARTHUR is the first American President to cut loose from the fashion of the fathers and shroud himself in a frock coat and gloves at a morning reception. It was doubtless the right thing to do, but it was a departure from the habit which had survived in the White House from the last generation, when full dress was the dress of ceremony at all hours, and precise lawyers and careful law-makers and dignified clergymen never wore anything else.

THE members of the Protestant Episcopal church in the United States during the past year gave $7,311,784 for its support, an increase of $298,032 over their gifts of last year. It has sixty-five Bishops, 3,401 clergymen and 3,085 parishes, and 314,580 communicants, an average of one clergyman to each 102 communicants. The baptisms during the year have shown a decrease of 3,000.

THOMAS T. HENRY was the first colored lawyer to pass the local examining board in Philadelphia. He was admitted to the bar last week. THE crops of Pennsylvania for the year 1881 are estimated by the State Board of Agriculture as follows: Corn, 32,780,000 bushels; wheat, 19,470,000 bushels, oats, 34,250,000 bushels; buckwheat, 1,687,000 bushels; potatoes, 6,031,250 bushels; tobacco, 22,025,000 pounds.

NEWSPAPER "ORGANS."

If the excellence of a newspaper is not always measured by its profitableness, it is generally true that if it does not pay its owner, it is valueless to the public. Not all newspapers which make money are good, for some succeed by catering to the lowest tastes of respectable people, and to the prejudice, ignorance and passion of the lowest class; but as a rule the successful journal pecuniarily is the best journal. The reasons for this are on the surface. The impecunious newspaper cannot give its readers promptly the news, and, still worse, it cannot be independent. The political journal that relies for support on drippings of party favor or patronage is a poor affair, and, in the long run or short run, comes to grief. The newspaper only becomes a real power when it is able on the basis of pecuniary independence to free itself from all such entanglements. An editor, who stands with hat in hand, has the respect accorded to any other beggar.—Charles Dudley Warner.

THE St. Louis (Mo.) Post-Dispatch, at the close of a long article, says: In fact, St. Jacobs Oil is pushing all other remedies out of the field, and, excellent though some of the liniments, formerly offered are, the efficacy of St. Jacobs Oil is magical in cases of sciatica, rheumatism, pleurisy, neuralgia, nervous headache, lumbago, and scores of other disorders; while in the case of sprains, burns, or injuries it is an absolute panacea, and for general use is better than the advice of many physicians. "A word to the wise is sufficient."

AN editor in New Jersey publishes a daily paper which is Republican in politics, and a weekly which is intensely Democratic. In the daily he pitches into himself as the editor of the weekly. But in the weekly he gets even by bitterly annihilating himself as editor of the daily. It is a question, so far, which has the better of it.

Well Indorsed by Our Own Citizens.

No matter how useful anything may be in itself, good indorsements seem to increase its usefulness greatly by insuring a wider field for the display of its special merits. We were thus impressed in view of the following statements received by one of our representatives from the leading individuals connected with some of the largest enterprises in our midst. Among others whose testimony was freely given was W. H. Stearns, Esq., Master Mechanic of the Conn. River Railroad, residing at No. 28 Boylston street, who observed:—St. Jacobs Oil has had remarkable effect among the men employed here. One of them jammed his arm very badly, and by the use of St. Jacobs Oil was greatly benefitted, and the arm was healed. Another used it for severe rheumatic pains in the knee, and pronounced the Oil a complete success as he was cured by its use. Mr. A. B. Taylor, of the "Bay & Taylor Manufacturing Co." was pleased to say: "My aunt, Mrs. Pillsbury, of Mount Clair, N. J., while visiting at our house tried St. Jacobs Oil for rheumatism and neuralgia, and found immediate relief every time. She pronounced it the best thing she had ever tried for the trouble. Mr. J. B. Weston, 45 Greenwood street, Supt. Car Works, Boston & Albany Railroad, thus addressed our reporter: "I am one more of the fortunates who have had the good luck to hear of that wonderful remedy, St. Jacobs Oil. I had rheumatism in the shoulder severely and could find no relief until I used the Oil. I applied it and must confess I was surprised at the results. I am almost well and expect to be entirely so in a few days."—Springfield (Mass.) Union.

WEATHER--OR NOT.

We admire the philosophy of the unfortunate man, who, when everything had been swept away, said, "Well, there'll be weather and taxes left, at any rate." Alas! weather is the "yellow dog" of all subjects; everyone thinks it his special right to try to better the weather, and hurls his anathemas against "Old Probabilities," and all who endeavor to assist him in regulating the weather. The following communication is from Prof. Tice, of St. Louis, Mo., the renowned meteorologist and weather prophet of the West. It does not discuss the weather but something surely of more importance to those who suffer with that painful malady he speaks of: "The day after concluding my lectures at Burlington,

Iowa, on the 21st of December last, I was seized with a sudden attack of neuralgia in the chest, giving me excruciating pain and almost preventing breathing. My pulse, usually 80, fell to 25; intense nausea of the stomach succeeded, and a cold, clammy sweat covered my entire body. The attending physician could do nothing to relieve me. After suffering for three hours, I thought—as I had been using ST. JACOBS OIL with good effect for rheumatic pains—I would try it. I saturated a piece of flannel, large enough to cover my chest, with the Oil, and applied it. The relief was almost instantaneous. In one hour I was entirely free from pain, and would have taken the train to fill an appointment that night in a neighboring town had my friends not dissuaded me. As it was, I took the night train for my home, in St. Louis, and have not been troubled since.

DR. SCHENCK'S
Pulmonic Syrup,
Seaweed Tonic, and Mandrake Pills.

When taken as directed, will cleanse the whole system, restore the appetite, make the food digest easily and cause it to make new and healthy blood. In this way the system is put in a condition that renders it possible for the lungs to heal in Consumption, and in no other way can this disease be cured.

Before anything can be done towards a cure the stomach and bowels must be cleansed, so that the food that is taken will digest and make healthy blood. Emaciation or loss of flesh in Consumption, is always caused by a lack of nourishment, and nourishment can only come from well digested food. To attempt to stop a cough when the lungs are diseased is always dangerous. To try to stop night sweats without building up the general system by well digested food is useless, and in many cases the medicines given to relieve these symptoms are the cause of death.

CONSUMPTION

MANDRAKE PILLS

Do not produce sickness at the stomach, nausea or griping. On the contrary, they are so mild and agreeable in their action that a person suffering with a sick headache, sour stomach or pain in the bowels, is speedily relieved of these distressing symptoms. They act directly on the liver, the organ which, when in a healthy condition, purifies the blood for the whole body.

They are a perfect preparation of that great and well-known remedy, Mandrake or Podophyllin, a remedy that has displaced the use of mercury, as well as many other poisonous drugs, in the practice of every intelligent physician.

Prof. John King, of the College of Medicine, of Cincinnati, says: "In Constipation it acts upon the bowels without disposing them to subsequent costiveness. In Chronic Liver Complaint there is not its equal in the whole range of medicines, being vastly more useful than mercurial agents, arousing the liver to healthy action, increasing the flow of bile, and keeping up these actions longer than any other agent with which we are acquainted." (See American Dispensatory, page 790.)

In all cases of Liver Complaint or Dyspepsia, when there is great weakness or debility, Dr. Schenck's Seaweed Tonic should be used in connection with these Pills.

HEREDITARY CONSUMPTION CURED.

DR. SCHENCK:

Dear Sir: In the autumn of 1877 I had a severe cough, with terrible pain in my sides and between my shoulders. I had very little appetite, and what little I could eat only distressed me. I consulted physicians, who said my condition was a very bad one and gave me five different cough syrups and tonics, from which I received no benefit, but seemed to grow worse and kept losing flesh and strength. I had night sweats, and sweat most of the time during the day. I coughed and raised blood and a salt, foamy phlegm; my throat was filled with ulcers, I could hardly swallow; sometimes I could not speak a loud word for weeks; my lungs grew more painful every day with difficult breathing, while pleurisy pains would almost stop my breath. I had colic pains, sour stomach and vomiting up everything I ate. My whole body was filled with pain. I could not lie down, but had to recline in a sitting posture to breathe.

I gave up and did not think of ever getting up again, as it was hard moving myself; my feet and ankles began to swell badly, and my hips had given out long before.

In this sinking condition, I thought I would try your remedy for consumption; it might do me some good; it could do me no harm, for I was certain I could not live a month longer the way I was.

At that time, May, 1878, I procured your Pulmonic Syrup, Seaweed Tonic and Pills, and took them as directed. In a week I was better and began to throw off from the lungs a greenish yellow matter streaked with blood.

I could eat a little without throwing it up, the pains in my sides were not so severe, I could sleep an hour very soundly, and that was what I had not done for three months.

I took your medicines steadily six months, my cough got better, I did not sweat so bad at nights, kept gaining slowly, and in a year after I began your medicines I could say I felt well.

I began to gain flesh, and last September weighed one hundred and thirty-five pounds, fifteen pounds more than I ever weighed before in my life.

Your medicines, I know, saved my life; and I would say, from my own experience, to all consumptives, take Dr. Schenck's medicines, for they will certainly cure you.

I had Consumption, it is hereditary in our family, my father and two brothers having died of it.

I have had better health the past winter than for ten years previous. Yours Respectfully,
MRS. SARAH A. CARTER.
CARLISLE, Mass., April 5th, 1880.

CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED!

DR. J. H. SCHENCK:

Dear Sir: About sixteen years ago, while living in Canada, my health became very poor. My disease came on gradually, beginning with a loss of appetite and afterwards great weakness, which brought on night sweats and a dry, hacking cough. My chest and back were very weak, and so sore that I could not bear my weight against the back of a chair. At different times I raised considerable blood, which my physician said came from the lungs. I employed several doctors, but they all told me the same thing—that my lungs were badly affected; and the last one that I had also said that I could live but a short time, and that I had better go to my mother's home in Winstead, Ct., as soon as I could, that with careful nursing I might live for some time. When I got to my mother's I was very low indeed, so that my mother sent for her doctor. He pronounced me beyond all help. He, however, left me some medicine which he said would relieve my worst symptoms. After this, my mother employed another doctor, who said that one of my lungs was nearly gone. I ate scarcely anything for several months, and never expected to get well. One day, a friend who lives in Collinsville, Ct., gave my father one of your pamphlets on Consumption. He brought it home and told me to look over it and see if any of the cases described in it were like mine. I read the book through, and found so many cases described there that seemed as bad as mine, that were cured, that I began to hope that I too might recover by using the medicines. My father, finding that they were not kept in Winstead, sent to New York and got a supply. In one week after I began their use, my night sweats ceased, and my appetite began to improve. In two weeks after this I was much better in every way; I commenced to use the medicines in March; in July I felt quite strong; in two months more I was well, and I have had good health ever since. I believe that I would not be alive to-day but for the use of your medicines, and all the doctors I had said my disease was Consumption, and that I was incurable. Yours Truly,
MRS. CHAS. W. PLUMMER,
April 29th, 1881. 374 Main St., Springfield, Mass.

DR. J. H. SCHENCK, Philadelphia, Pa.

Dear Sir: Seeing one of your agents distributing your books in this village a few days ago, has reminded me of the past, and has made me feel that I ought to acknowledge with gratitude the benefit I once received from your medicines.

I was a soldier in the army from 1862 to 1865, and when mustered out was in a crippled state, having had during my service, scurvy and camp fever, which, with the malaria of the swamps in which much of our operations were carried on, left me diseased all over. I was soon attacked with chronic diarrhœa and a constant, hacking cough. My whole nervous system was completely prostrated. I was apparently fast approaching the grave. In looking over the newspapers to find something advertised that would do me good, I found the advertisement of your medicines. Though I had but little faith, I bought the Syrup and Tonic, and commenced their use. I soon found that what you said of your medicines was true, for they worked an entire revolution in my system—my cough gradually grew less until it disappeared altogether, as also did my diarrhœa and other alarming symptoms, and I was entirely cured.

I shall always hold in grateful remembrance two things: The "Cooper Shop" Free Refreshment Saloon for Soldiers, of Philadelphia, and Dr. Schenck's Medicines, of Philadelphia. I believe the medicines saved my life, as I have stated. Pardon the late acknowledgment of the great benefit I have received from you.
Your obedient servant,

A combination of Protoxide of Iron, Peruvian Bark and Phosphorus in a palatable form. The only preparation of Iron that will not blacken the teeth, so characteristic of other Iron preparations.

GENTLEMEN: I have used DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC in my practice, and in an experience of twenty-five years in medicine, have never found anything to give the results that DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC does. In many cases of Nervous Prostration, Female Diseases, Dyspepsia, and an impoverished condition of the blood, this peerless remedy, has in my hands, made some wonderful cures. Cases that have baffled some of our most eminent physicians, have yielded to this great and incomparable remedy. I prescribe it in preference to any iron preparation made. In fact, such a compound as DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC is a necessity in my practice.

SONGS OF NATURE.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

The harp at Nature's advent strong
Has never ceased to play;
The song that stars of morning sung
Have never died away.

And prayer is made and praise is given,
By all things near and far;
The ocean looketh up to heaven,
And mirrors every star.

e waves are kneeling on the strand,
As kneels the human knee,
Their white locks bowing to the sand,
The priesthood of the sea!

They pour their glittering treasures forth,
Their gifts of pearl they bring,
And all the listening hills on earth
Take up the song they sing.

The green earth sends her incense up
From many a mountain shrine;
From folded leaf and dewy cup
She pours her sacred wine.

The mists above the morning rills
Rise wide as wings of prayer;
The altar curtains of the hills
Are sunset's purple air.

The winds with hymns of prayer are loud,
Or low with sobs of pain,
The thunder-organ of the cloud,
The dropping tears of rain.

With drooping head and branches crossed
One twilight forest grieves,
r speaks with tongues of Pentecost
From all its summit leaves.

The blue sky is the temple's arch,
Its transept earth and air,
The music of its starry march,
The chorus of a prayer.

o nature keeps the reverent frame
With which her years began, nd all her signs and voices shame
The prayerless heart of man.

ODERN DETECTIVE WORK.

o begin with, I'll say that detectives divided into three general classes: ows, investigators and ropers. When n begins the business, he is put at owing. It is an excellent way to test and see what stuff there is in him. e will watch a house night after t in all sorts of weather, or a man after day, without exciting suspi , it is pretty safe to employ him reg y. A good shadow is an important of a detective force. In a great y cases of crime, there is no clew to criminal, but only a suspicion. The ow is told to watch such a man and what he does, what sort of company eeps, where he resorts; or he is told atch a house, see who goes in and what the character of the inmates hat hours they keep. Now, in order o this, a man must have tact, intelli e, perseverance. He must not only excite the suspicions of the suspected ies, but he must not excite the sus ns of the police. It is very awk for a detective to give an account mself to a policeman. While the po an may be the most honest and ful in the world, it endangers the case knows a detective is around, and tions it casually to a brother police You can see that to do his work a shadow must be a man whose ap ance will not provoke comment or ct attention. You'd not make a good ow. You're too tall. A very short won't do. In fact a thoroughly nonplace-looking man is the very He should be young and active. have had office boys who developed iderable talent for that sort of work. stimes a boy can be used where a cannot. He can hang around a e and make the acquaintance of r boys in the neighborhood, and criminal, who may be watching from e the house for a chance to steal unobserved, may think the coast when he sees that there is no one nd except two or three boys play marbles on the sidewalk. We had e of this kind in Baltimore at the of the robbery of the Third Nation Bank there. We wanted to watch a e on Perry street, and we couldn't with our regular shadows. So we a boy there. He was playing les when the man came out, and gave the signal which resulted in capture. But boys, as a rule, are fe. They are likely to become too ortant in their own estimation, and may talk. Some great criminals be captured by means of shadows. Northampton Bank robbers were owed months before the arrest of t and Dunlap. Billy Connors was owed two months, and Red Leary, re his last arrest, was shadowed nine s by three different detectives.

The investigator," continued Mr. erton, "is the man who, after a e has been committed, makes a minary investigation. He usually s with the local officers. He seldom nds to work in secret. He looks ground over, mingles with civilians, with every one, and forms his con ons. He must be a man of greater ligence than is necessary to make a shadow. He reports the results of his investigations, and on this report is decided the course to be pursued. Perhaps one result of his report will be that a shadow is put on a certain man, and an effort is made in that way to reach the truth in the matter. The preliminary investigator, in short, opens the way for private investigation.

"The roper must, to speak plainly, 'rope' men in. He comes nearest to the dime-novel detective of any in the list, but he is a great way off from that romantic hero. The roper is simply a gentlemanly person, social, of good address, able to frame excuses for anything he may do or say, and able to turn the conversation in any way he pleases. He must have traveled, must have a good knowledge of men, must be an easy talker, but a better listener."

"Is a detective's life particularly dangerous?"

"Not in the least. No more so than yours. When a man has the law on his side, and attempts to arrest a criminal, there is not much danger. Criminals are very often cowards, especially our Eastern thieves and burglars. Occasionally a young and reckless thief will attempt to shoot, but such men are of the lower order of criminals. Burglars, counterfeiters, forgers, and the like, take chances of being arrested as one of the chances of their business. If you have the law on your side, and go at them in a proper manner, you'll win every time. There is everything in going strong enough. If a detective is foolish enough to go single-handed into a thieves' resort, he's bound to have trouble, no matter who the criminal is. But in the West and South a detective takes his life in his hand. The detectives who are sent into Arkansas, Texas, Missouri, Western Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, the Indian Territory, and into the great South and West generally, run a tremendous risk. We lost five men in Missouri in eight months in looking up the James and Younger brothers. Our men were working for the Adams Express Company at the time. The men who go out after such criminals earn their money every time, I can assure you."

"That suggests the question of pay."

"Well, the pay runs all the way from $15 and $20 a week to $3,500 a year. The man that goes on a dangerous mission doesn't necessarily get higher wages. In fact he does not get them. He works for so much, and does what he is ordered to do. But at the same time a man is not asked to do a dangerous piece of work against his will. If he hesitates he need not go. To succeed a man must go willingly. Of course the fact that a man succeeds in a dangerous piece of work is often the means of an increase of his salary. Why, it's like any other business exactly. Each man has his value. It won't do to work for a reward. Human nature is human nature, and when a man sees a big pile of money coming as the result of fixing a crime on some man—well, it's often dangerous for that man, guilty or innocent. The work should be done for so much, whatever the result."

"What is the average life of a detective?"

"Well, I don't know as to that. I think, though, they stick to the work on an average, say fifteen years. Then they get tired of traveling, and want to settle down. They get situations in banks, hotels and other institutions."

"Are female detectives much employed or depended upon?"

"It is difficult to get a respectable woman to do detective work. There are lots of them that claim to be detectives, but they must be employed with caution. They are occasionally useful to work up a case against a woman. In such cases we usually employ a female relative of some of our men—a woman who knows what detective work is, and who is respectable. But we have to be very careful always in employing women."

"Do detectives marry?"

"Sometimes. But a man with a family cannot, in the nature of the case, be as good a detective, as daring, as ready to go anywhere at a moment's notice as an unmarried man. But of course a good many of them marry."

"Are disguises much used?"

"Not nearly so often as the student of Gaboriau would imagine. It's all nonsense, this talking of a man's so disguising himself by false whiskers, a wig and paint that he can pass unrecognized in daylight. He might not be recognized, but he would surely be detected. The police will pounce on a man at once if they see him wear a false beard—and it's easy enough to tell a false beard—much easier than a wig, and they are easily detected. The shadows usually carry a soft cap or hat, or both, in their pockets to use in case of necessity; and sometimes in the night a beard can be used, but not often. If the criminal has 'dropped on' a shadow the best plan is to put another man on him. As I said in the start, there's very little romance or mystery about a detective's life."—*G. H. THE MORAL OF A PAIR OF STOCKINGS.

The following letter was written by a distinguished literary lady to a learned Judge on the eve of his marriage:

DEAR COUSIN: Herewith you will receive a present of a pair of stockings knit by my own hands; and be assured, dear coz, that my friendship for you is as warm as the material, active as the finger work, and generous as the donation.

But I consider the present as peculiarly appropriate on the occasion of your marriage.

You will remark, in the first place, that there are two individuals united in one pair, who are to walk side by side, guarding against coldness, and giving comfort as long as they last. The thread of their texture is mixed; and so, alas, is the thread of life.

In these, however, the white is made to predominate, expressing my desire and confidence that thus it will be with the color of your existence. No black is used, for I believe you will be wholly free from the black passions of wrath and jealousy. The darkest color here is blue, which is excellent when we do not make it too blue.

Other appropriate thoughts rise in my mind regarding these stockings. The most indifferent subjects, when viewed by the mind in a suitable frame, may furnish instructive influence, as saith the poet:

The iron dogs, the fuel and tongs,
The bellows that have leathern lungs,
The firewood, ashes and smoke,
Do all to righteousness provoke.

But to the subject. You will perceive that the top of these things (by which I suppose courtship to be represented) are seamed, and by no means of seaming are drawn into a snarl, but after comes a time when the whole is made plain, and continues so till the final toeing off. By this I wish to take occasion to congratulate you, that you are now through with seeming and have come to plain reality. Again, as the whole of these comely stockings was not made at once, but by the addition of one little stitch after another, put in with skill and discretion, until the whole presents the fair and equal piece of work which you see, so life does not consist of one great action, but millions of little ones combined; and so it may be with our lives—no stitch dropped when duties are to be performed, no widening made when bad principles are to be removed or economy is to be preserved, neither seaming nor narrowing where truth and generosity are in question.

Thus every stitch of life made right and set in the right place—none either too large or too small, too light or too loose; may you keep on your smooth and even course, making existence one fair and consistent piece, until together having passed the heel you may come to the very toe of life, and here in the final narrowing off and dropping off the coil of this emblmeatic pair of companions and comforting associates, nothing appears but white, the token of innocence and peace, of purity and light. May you, like these stockings—the final stitch being dropped, and the work completed—go together from the place where you were formed to a happier state of existence, a present from earth to heaven.

Hoping that these stockings and admanitions may meet a civil reception, I remain in the true-blue frendship, seemingly without seaming, yours from top to toe.

ACCORDING to the latest official information, vaccination is steadily advancing in favor with the people of India. During 1879-80 the operation was performed in Bengal in something like 500,000 more cases than in the previous year. Satisfactory returns were also obtained from the Bombay Presidency and the central provinces of Berar and British Burmah. The Burmese, indeed, are so ready to accept vaccination that it only remains to supply them with a competent staff of honest vaccinators, and to provide a regular supply of good lymph. In this respect they form an agreeable contrast to some of the people of the Punjab, who show considerable opposition, which, however, appears to be due partly to the ignorance and partly to the obstruction and apathy of the local authorities.

A STRANGE STORY.

The prevalence of drunkenness in the State prison at Auburn puzzled the officers for a long time. It was at first supposed that whisky was brought in by some one, but finally it was discovered that a distillery was in full operation within the walls of the institution. An enterprising convict had rigged a "worm" in a secluded spot in the kitchen, and, with corn meal and rye, was able to produce a liquor that would intoxicate whoever drank very much of it. The man did a thriving business, and when he was discovered he was making money at a rapid rate. "Beer," as it is called, is made even at this day. The beverage is a brewing of bread crust and yeast and is exhilarating, if nothing more. The men in the kitchen make it and sell it to the prisoners. At one time counterfeiting was actually carried on in the prison. Imitations were made of silver coins which would readily deceive unless closely examined. Molds were made of plaster of paris, and the 10, 25 and 50 cent pieces were plated in the saddlery hardware shop. The convicts were well supplied with this bogus money, and a great deal of it found its way into circulation outside.

The men are not allowed to carry watches, but a great many of them do, notwithstanding the rule to the contrary. Usually the watches are kept in leather bags which are suspended by a string about the neck underneath the clothing. A good many of the prisoners read the newspapers regularly. How they obtain them is a mystery. The New York dailies reach Auburn at 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and often they will get into the hands of the convicts the same evening. Of course, each prisoner is not supplied with a paper. One paper will do for a dozen men or more. The newspapers must be brought in by officers who are a little lax in discipline. It is supposed that all letters written by convicts pass through the hands of the chaplain, whose duty it is to see that they contain no mischievous or improper language. Half of the men in the prison send and receive letters that the chaplain never sees. These "go through the underground," as the officers say. Generally they are taken in and out by citizen foremen, whose sympathies the men enlist. Some of the convicts send out for raw steaks, which they broil at the forges and in the furnaces. Others prefer cake and pie, for which they will spend every cent they can procure. Joe Coburn used to have two large mince pies sent to him regularly twice a week from New York. Finally the agent told Joe that he would be compelled to deny him his toothsome pastry, and the semi-weekly shipment of pies was discontinued.—New York Times.

THE TRANSPLANTATION OF BONE.

The ingrafting of flesh is a surgical feat which has been frequently accomplished with success; but the first known instance of transplanting a piece of bone from one living person to another was announced at a recent meeting of the Royal Society. In 1878 a young child was admitted into the Glasgow Infirmary with necrosis or mortification of the right humerus or bone of the upper arm. The mortified part was removed from the bone, but even after fifteen months no fresh bone had grown to fill up the gap. This extended to two-thirds of the entire shaft, and it became necessary to try and transplant a piece of alien bone into the place. On three several occasions portions of living bone were transplanted into the child's arm—the pieces being obtained from osseous wedges which had to be excised from the healthy bones of other patients. The pieces were divided into many small fragments before being applied, and in course of time they united together into a solid rod, thereby converting a helpless arm into a useful one. The operation is of great importance as demonstrating that a piece of transplanted bone is capable of living and growing on another system, to the benefit of the latter.

CLARA LOUISE KELLOGG and her colored maid, and Mr. Pond, her business manager, sat down for dinner at a hotel in Milan, Tenn., recently. The proprietor stepped up and informed the maid that separate tables were reserved for servants. Miss Kellogg at once became very indignant. If the maid was not permitted to sit at the same table, the whole party would leave the dining-room. This argument was a clincher, and the meal was served without further objection on the part of the proprietor.

MANUFACTURERS of hats for the market are finding, to their surprise, that within a generation the standard sizes have decreased, so much so that large-sized hats are not made to keep in stock, as formerly, and are now only made to order. Twenty years ago the popular sizes were hats with a circumference of 21¼ to 23¾ inches—that is, from 6 5-16 to 7⅝; but now the popular sizes are 21 to 22½ inches or 6¾ to 7⅛. There is no agreement among manufacturers as to the reason for the decline. Some say that the close cropping of hair, now fashionable, is a proper explanation; but it is stated, on the other hand, that no head of hair would make this difference. Others say the different style of wearing the hat, which formerly was to push it well down on the back of the head, accounts for the change. American dealers say that, whereas the soft hat used to be worn by clerks and other salaried men, and stovepipes by ministers and lawyers, the reverse is now the fact. The hat-doctors disagree. It is generally supposed that the quality of the brain, not the size of the envelope, is the real mark of talents and intelligence. The hatter, however, seems to hold to a different theory. In a list of illustrious names presented in this connection, lo! in the matter of head circumference Mr. Tilden's leads all the rest, as witness: Gov. S. J. Tilden, 8 1-16; Gen. Grant, 7¼; ex-Senator Roscoe Conkling, 7⅜; Gen. Garfield, 7¼; John Sherman, 7¼; Benjamin H. Bristow, 7¼; W. M. Evarts, 6⅞; L. M. Barlow, 7⅜; ex-Lieut. Gov. Dorsheimer, 7¼; Prince of Wales, 7; Beaconsfield, 7; Gladstone, 7¼; John Bright, 7¼; Lord Chelmsford, 6¾; Dickens, 7¼; Thackeray, 7¼; Earl Russell, 7¼; Macaulay, 7⅜; Louis Phillippe, 7¼; Archbishop of York, 8.

GIRL POST-BOYS.

In his book, "The Land of the Midnight Sun," Mr. Paul B. Du Chaillu gives many novel experiences. Not the least interesting of these were his rides with girl drivers over Scandinavian roads. "At every station in Finland," he writes, "I had a young girl for a driver, and these children of the north seemed not in the least afraid of me. My first driver's name was Ida Catherina; she gave me a silver ring, and was delighted when she saw it on my finger. I promised to bring her a gold one the following winter, and kept my word. She was glad, indeed, when at the end of the drive, after paying, I gave her a silver piece. Another driver, 12 years of age, was named Ida Carolina. The tire of one of our wheels became loose, but she was equal to the emergency; she alighted, blocked the wheel with a stone, went to a farm house and borrowed a few nails and hammer, and with the help of a farmer made everything right in a few minutes; she did not seem in the least put out by the accident; she chatted with me all the time, though I did not understand what she said, for I did not then know the Finnish language. She was a little beauty, with large blue eyes, thick fair hair, and rosy cheeks."

AN INCIDENT AT A REVIVAL MEETING.

In the little town of Peninsula there lives a disciple of Blackstone who had acquired more than a mere local reputation as a collector of hard bills. His ability in this direction was so well recognized that a threat of a weary creditor to hand the bill to McNeil for collection would usually extract shekels from the toughest canaler. A few months since Peninsula was visited with an awakening grace. Protracted meetings were held, and many wanderers were gathered into the fold. On one occasion, at an experience meeting, one of the elect, Brother Coleman, arose to testify. In one corner of the building slumbered a rough, rugged canal boatman, who awakened with the discourse.

"My dear brethren and sisters," said Prof. Coleman, "I served the devil more'n thirty year, and he never gin me a cent of pay—"

At this juncture the canaler, who had not taken in the principal idea sought to be advanced, roared out in stentorian tones: "Send in the account to Bill McNeil, and he'll collect every blasted cent of it."

"NOW I LAY ME DOWN TO SLEEP."

By virtue of its age and value and previous associations, this little prayer has become a classic. It must be very ancient, for who can tell when or by whom it was written? Thousands, from the silver-haired pilgrim to the lisping infant, sink to nightly slumber murmuring the simple petition. It has trembled on the lips of the dying. One instance was that of an old saint of 86 years, whose mind had so failed that he could not recognize his own daughter. "Very touching," says the relator, "was the scene one night after retiring, as he called his daughter, as if she were his mother, saying, like a little child, 'Mother, come here by my bed and hear my prayers before I go to sleep.' She came near. He clasped his white, withered hands, and reverently said:

"Now I lay me down to sleep,
I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to keep;
If I should die before I wake,
I pray Thee, Lord, my soul to take;

then quietly fell asleep and woke in heaven."

A distinguished Judge, who many years ago died in New York in extreme old age, said that his mother had taught the stanza to him in infancy, and that he never omitted it at night. From the press telegrams there appears to be terrible destitution along the Mississipi river. Whole counties are submerged, and the river is reported as sixty miles wide in some places. Thirty of the best cotton producing counties in Louisiana are inundated, and the waters are hardly expected to subside before the first of April.

Some of the "shining lights" are now charging the late President Garfield with treachery to his commander, Gen. Rosecrans, who was deposed from the command of the Army of the Cumberland in 1863. Garfield was chief-of-staff to Rosecrans, and statements made by him to President Lincoln, detrimental to the military ability of Gen. Rosecrans, were the grounds upon which that officer was removed from his command. Lights lately thrown upon the matter, prove that Garfield's statements were untrue.

A CONTRAST.

The following statement of notorious facts we find in the columns of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch:

"Some twenty years ago Conkling, Blaine, Sherman, Allison, Windom, and Wilson were all Republican members of the House together. They were alll poor at time—very poor. Blaine is now a millionaire; Allison of Iowa, in the Senate, is another millionaire; Sherman is trebly a millionaire; Windom is a millionaire; Wilson also got to be very rich; Roscoe Conkling—the ablest, greatest, proudest of them all—is poor today."

This contrast is striking, but it is eminently to the credit of the former Senator from New York, who, whatever may have been his faults as a leader, was never accused of venality, and whose whole record in Congress is sustained.

Blaine, Allison, Sherman, Windom, and Wilson, on the other hand, have all been investigated in one form or another, and they have all needed "vindication." Their lives and their success reveal the sources of wealth at Washington, and make plain the character of legislation by which needy Congressmen have become millionaires.

CHILIAN NEWSPAPER ABUSE.

WASINGTON, March 8.—One of the officers of the Navy Department has received from a friend in Santiago, Chili, a number of Chilian newspapers, with marked articles abusing the United States in general terms, ridiculing Mr. Blaine's proposed American Congress, and lampooning the United States Navy in particular. One of the papers contains a large cartoon representing the destruction of the United States Navy by a Chilian fleet. A large wash-tub manned and rigged in a most ridiculous fashion is made to do duty in the picture as the United States Navy.

Under the cartoon are the words "The Chilians can beat the Yankees every time." Several of the articles were translated and submitted to Secretary Hunt. He attaches no importance to them and says they can hardly be regarded as representing, in any way, the true state of feeling existing among the people of Chili toward the United States.

ABUSE OF WORDS.

The Montgomery Advertiser (Feb.—) speaks of the "national government," and the Talladega Watchtower (Feb. 15) alludes to the "war of the rebellion."

Ten or fifteen years from now the youth of the South will be inquiring the meaning of the word "federal," and will ask the use of the side show government at the state capitals when all of it could be done at Washington. They will also wonder why Robt. E. Lee and Benedict Arnold should not have been overtaken for their crimes by Divine vengeance when they escaped the hangman, and will look with gratitude on the Grants and Sheridans and Blaines for not butchering more of the men and women of the Southern States as traitors.

All of our literature is printed at the North except a few newspapers. Our grown people as well as our growing ones are insensibly absorbed in the Yankee ideas of the struggle between the sections. We subscribe to newspapers and books which glibly talk of "the rebellion," of "the traitor Jeff Davis," "the pirate Semmes," "the national government," "the sainted Garfield," and the like. There is no protest from us at these false and malignant terms.

True, words are not facts, but they often create impressions that become the equivalent of facts. Acquiescence in the wrong that others do us is often to allow that wrong to ripen into a right.

SOMEBODY'S DARLING.

THE STORY OF A BOUQUET AND A BOTTLE.

WASHINGTON, March 8.—The Evening Critic to-night publishes the following: A great many funny things occur in life that can not be explained by any one save those dircetly interested. One of these came to pass yesterday in this way: About 2 o'clock p. m. a messenger boy made his appearance at the south entrance to the Senate chamber with a very handsome bouquet, and in a little box accompanying the bouquet was a card with the following directions on it: "To seat seventy-six, east side of the capitol." Now, there is no seat numbered seventy-six on the east side of the Senate chamber, but on the west side there is, and Senator Farley occupies it. So the bouquet and box were taken to him. He denied any knowledge of the matter. The boy, who had brought it all the way from Thirteen and E. northwest, was anxious to find an owner, so he told the Senate messenger to ask the gentleman at seventy-six to open the box and probably he would get an explanation. Thereupon, Mr. Farley opened the box, and in it he found a note with no outside direction at all, and a nice little flask of corn-juice. He opened the note, and it began thus: "My Darling: Our meeting was so happy ——" when the old Senator stopped. He read no further. "Take," said he, "the d—d thing back to the boy. I know nothing about it." The boy was advised to take it over to the House and see if he could not find a claimant. He did so. A glance at the Congressional directory shows that seat seventy-six on the east side of the Hall of Representatives, is occupied by the festive and warlike J. C. S. Blackburn, of old Kaintuck. A further inspection of that publication will show that the gay Jo is just about the right age to mash and be mashed and have happy meetings with sweet charmers. That flask of corn-juice, too, would remind the jolly Jo of his happy home in the dark and bloody grounds, where every spring that gurgles from the earth has a still backed up against it, and where the juice of the yellow corn is alike the sustenance of the babes and the milk of old age. Anyway, the bouquet and its accompanying box never got back to the Senate end of the capitol, nor was it taken back whence it came.

WHAT MRS. GRUNDY SAYS:

That people who advertise, and people who do not should remember that people have grown rich by advertising in a good and liberal fashion, and this is why some people get rich faster than others.

That debts of gratitude run at compound interest for life, and should not be rashly incurred.

That if a man would insult you without a cause, "back off from him in true canine style."

That he who aims at unimportant objects, grovels; but he whose aims are high, rises towards the sky.

That in things indifferent, be yielding; in things moral, unbending.

That it is easier to make a place than to hold one made to your hand; easier to make a fortune than to keep one; easier to swell the stream when low than to raise it higher in flood.

FROM MAPLESVILLE.

On Thursday, the 2d inst., we mounted our Bucephalus, and started over the country to the neighborhood of Cooper's, on business with our county superintendent of education. On the road there we noticed many improvements. The country around Well's Gin particularly attracted our attention. Any person prejudiced as we were against piney woods land, would be surprised at the appearance of the fields, which indicate the production of good cotton, corn, wheat and oats, to say nothing of the minor crops. Well's Gin appears to be a place of some importance from the number of people seen there. On our arrival at Prof. Corderie's, we were most hospitably entertained by that gentleman and his lady. At night we heard of a dancing party in the neighborhood and being invited we went to see the young folks "trip the light fantastic," etc., and to hear some good music. In the latter we were not disappointed. The musician, Mr. J. S. Jones gave us some of the best we ever heard outside of a concert hall. His rendition of "Jackson's Retreat," and the "Walls of Jericho," were particularly impressive. The latter was one of the most solemn and impressive airs ever played upon the violin.

BIJOU.

SOME NEW GEOGRAPHY.

FOR PEOPLE WHO HAVE NOT CUT THEIR EYE-TEETH.

Of what is the surface of the earth composed?

Of corner lots, mighty poor roads, railroad tracks, base ball grounds, cricket fields and skating rinks.

What portion of the globe is water?

About three-fourths. Sometimes they add a little gin and nutmeg to it.

What is a town?

A town is a considerable collection of houses and inhabitants, with four or five men who "run the party" and lend money at fifteen per cent. interest.

What is a city?

A city is an incorporated town, with a mayor who believes that the whole world shakes when he happens to fall on a cross walk.

What is commerce?

Borrowing $5 for a day or two and dodging the lender for a year or two.

Name the different races.

Horse race, boat race, bicycle race, and racing around to find a man to indorse your note.

Into how many classes is mankind divided?

Six; being enlightened, civilized, half-civilized, savage, too utter, not-worth-a-cent, and Indian agents

What nations are called enlightened?

Those which have had the most wars, the worst laws and produced the worst criminals.

How many motions has the earth?

That's according to how you mix your drinks, and which way you go home.

What is the earth's axis?

The lines passing between New York and Chicago.

What causes day and night?

Day is caused by night getting tired out. Night is caused by everybody taking the street car and going home to supper.

What is a map?

A map is a drawing to show the jury where Smith stood when Jones gave him a lift under the eye.

What is a mariner's compass?

A jug holding four gallons.

Ex-President Grant, whom the government at Washington lately placed upon the retired list of army officers, with a salary of $25,000 per annum, has for some time been gambling in railroad stock on Wall street. A late report hath it that a sudden fall in some the stock which he held has "busted" him, and it being learned, on investigation, that he at once deeded his Long Branch property to Mrs. Garfield, seems to have gone far towards confirming the report.

"JESSO."

We want more industry and more opportunities for our boys and our girls, and we want our cotton worked up at home and that will give us cheaper goods for we wont have to pay freight both ways. They talk a great deal about a tariff for revenue only, but I have never seen one yet that didn't prove to be a tariff for protection, and I never will. It is all a complicated piece of machinery fixed up by politicians to get to Congress, and they stay there and the poor consumers don't know anything about it. Jesso. In the good old honest days when the masses of the people made nearly everything at home it didn't matter so much, but it does now. I was a-thinking of the days when we used to wear country jeans and home-made shoes and wool hats an drank water out of a clean gourd instead of a silver dipper, and sat in split-bottom chairs—the best chair in the world—and lived in houses we were not afraid of. I do hate to be afraid of a house when I go in it. I was thinking of the times when the boys went to mill and chopped the firewood and wore home-made galluses and made balls out of old rubber shoes ant played marbles without fudging, and called up doodle-bugs out of their sand-holes. The boys are now too smart for the like of that. They know more than we know, and by the time they are grown they will know it all and quit. Jesso. But still I am hopeful. There is always some good seed in the basket, and maybe the old stock won't run out.—Bill Arp.

IN MEMORIAM.

The following preamble and resolutions were adopted by Amand Lodge No. 250, February 25, 1882:

Whereas, it has pleased the Alwise and Supreme Architect of the Universe, in His infinite wisdom, to remove from our midst by death, our worthy and beloved brother and Secretary, William G. Easterling. Therefore, be it Resolved 1. That by this sad dispensation, the fraternity of Free and Accepted Masons mourns the loss of one of its beneficial members. He was a brother tried and found true, and was ready to respond to every obligation belonging to the order; and as a husband and father he was kind and affectionate.

Resolved 2. That in the life and character of Bro. Easterling, we have an example of the matchless power of our Creator, who giveth and taketh at His will, and that in the nature of this sad bereavement, we have a warning to be at all times ready to cross that dark valley and river of death, and be prepared to enter into that home made by the Great Architect of the Universe.

Resolved 3. That we tender to the bereaved family our sincere and heartfelt sympathy, and realizing the uncertainty of all earthly happiness, only in the due performance of many charitable duties enjoined upon us by the great I Am, would direct them as did our brother, with confidence to Him whose promises are to the widow and the fatherless.

Resolved 4. Brethren we too are mortal and must give an account for every vain and idle word. Yes, and every secret of our heart will shortly be made known. We now behold two seats made vacant by the monster death, within the past twelve months.

Resolved 5. That we examine ourselves more minutely, and get the beam out of our own eye, remembering we cannot be forgiven unless we forgive.

Resolved 6. That in testimony of respect for the memory of our brother, the members of this Lodge will wear the usual badge of mourning for thirty days.

Resolved 7. That a copy of these resolutions be published in THE CHILTON VIEW, that a copy be furnished the family of the deceased, and that a page in our minute book, be inscribed with his name and dedicated to his memory.

TWO GOOD PAPERS FOR PRICE OF ONE.

As the coming political campaign in this State promises to be unusually interesting, the people at large should be fully posted in all matters of general and local importance.

We have made arrangements by which the Montgomery WEEKLY ADVERTISER and THE CHILTON VIEW will be furnished subscribers for $2.00 per year. This is certainly cheap enough to bring the two papers in the reach of all who desire to know what is going on in the State and country at large. The price for both papers is little more than was charged for one a few years ago.

Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
AND SPERMATORRHŒA.

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

Mr. Scoville says that as soon as the bill of exceptions in Guiteau's case is ready he will retire from the defence. Guiteau has not broken down in the least, but is more unreasonable than ever.

Roderick McLean, the man who shot at Queen Victoria has been committed for trial on the charge of high treason. His is the sixth attempt that has been made upon the life of the present queen.

A Louisiana paper says: "But what of the overflows that carry so much dread with them? Do they not enrich the lands and are not heavier crops made upon them? We are of the opinion that the inundations are beneficial."

Senator Edmunds, who was tendered the Associate Justiceship of the U. S. Supreme Court after Mr. Conkling declined to accept, has also sent to the President a declination of the proffered honor. Samuel Blatchford, of New York, has been tendered the position.

From the press telegrams there appears to be terrible destitution along the Mississipi river. Whole counties are submerged, and the river is reported as sixty miles wide in some places. Thirty of the best cotton producing counties in Louisiana are inundated, and the waters are hardly expected to subside before the first of April.

Some of the "shining lights" are now charging the late President Garfield with treachery to his commander, Gen. Rosecrans, who was deposed from the command of the Army of the Cumberland in 1863. Garfield was chief-of-staff to Rosecrans, and statements made by him to President Lincoln, detrimental to the military ability of Gen. Rosecrans, were the grounds upon which that officer was removed from his command. Lights lately thrown upon the matter, prove that Garfield's statements were untrue.

A CONTRAST.

The following statement of notorious facts we find in the columns of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch:

"Some twenty years ago Conkling, Blaine, Sherman, Allison, Windom, and Wilson were all Republican members of the House together. They were alll poor at time—very poor. Blaine is now a millionaire; Allison of Iowa, in the Senate, is another millionaire; Sherman is trebly a millionaire; Windom is a millionaire; Wilson also got to be very rich; Roscoe Conkling—the ablest, greatest, proudest of them all—is poor today."

This contrast is striking, but it is eminently to the credit of the former Senator from New York, who, whatever may have been his faults as a leader, was never accused of venality, and whose whole record in Congress is sustained.

Blaine, Allison, Sherman, Windom, and Wilson, on the other hand, have all been investigated in one form or another, and they have all needed "vindication." Their lives and their success reveal the sources of wealth at Washington, and make plain the character of legislation by which needy Congressmen have become millionaires.

SERGEANT MASON'S SENTENCE.

NEW YORK, March 11.—The sentence of Sergeant Mason, who fired at Guiteau, has been approved by General Hancock. The sentence is that he be dishonorably discharged with the loss of all pay and allowances and to be confined in the penitentiary at hard labor for eight years.

PETITION FOR MASON'S PARDON.

TOLEDO, O., March 11.—A petition to President Arthur for the pardon of Sergeant Mason was circulated here to-day. It has already received the signature of a large number of prominent business men. The grounds presented for the exercise of the executive clemency are the excitement under which the shooting was done, and the petition claims that punishment enough has been suffered to meet the demands of military discipline.

CHILIAN NEWSPAPER ABUSE.

WASINGTON, March 8.—One of the officers of the Navy Department has received from a friend in Santiago, Chili, a number of Chilian newspapers, with marked articles abusing the United States in general terms, ridiculing Mr. Blaine's proposed American Congress, and lampooning the United States Navy in particular. One of the papers contains a large cartoon representing the destruction of the United States Navy by a Chilian fleet. A large wash-tub manned and rigged in a most ridiculous fashion is made to do duty in the picture as the United States Navy.

Under the cartoon are the words "The Chilians can beat the Yankees every time," Several of the articles were translated and submitted to Secretary Hunt. He attaches no importance to them and says they can hardly be regarded as representing, in any way, the true state of feeling existing among the people of Chili toward the United States.

ABUSE OF WORDS.

The Montgomery Advertiser (Feb.—) speaks of the "national government," and the Talladega Watchtower (Feb. 15) alludes to the "war of the rebellion."

Ten or fifteen years from now the youth of the South will be inquiring the meaning of the word "federal," and will ask the use of the side show government at the state capitals when all of it could be done at Washington. They will also wonder why Robt. E. Lee and Benedict Arnold should not have been overtaken for their crimes by Divine vengeance when they escaped the hangman, and will look with gratitude on the Grants and Sheridans and Blaines for not butchering more of the men and women of the Southern States as traitors.

All of our literature is printed at the North except a few newspapers. Our grown people as well as our growing ones are insensibly absorbed in the Yankee ideas of the struggle between the sections. We subscribe to newspapers and books which glibly talk of "the rebellion," of "the traitor Jeff. Davis," "the pirate Semmes," "the national government," "the sainted Garfield," and the like. There is no protest from us at these false and malignant terms.

True, words are not facts, but they often create impressions that become the equivalent of facts. Acquiescence in the wrong that others do us is often to allow that wrong to ripen into a right.

SOMEBODY'S DARLING.

THE STORY OF A BOUQUET AND A BOTTLE.

WASHINGTON, March 8.—The Evening Critic to-night publishes the following: A great many funny things occur in life that can not be explained by any one save those directly interested. One of these came to pass yesterday in this way: About 2 o'clock p. m. a messenger boy made his appearance at the south entrance to the Senate chamber with a very handsome bouquet, and in a little box accompanying the bouquet was a card with the following directions on it: "To seat seventy-six, east side of the capitol." Now, there is no seat numbered seventy-six on the east side of the Senate chamber, but on the west side there is, and Senator Farley occupies it. So the bouquet and box were taken to him. He denied any knowledge of the matter. The boy, who had brought it all the way from Thirteen and E, northwest, was anxious to find an owner, so he told the Senate messenger to ask the gentleman at seventy-six to open the box and probably he would get an explanation. Thereupon, Mr. Farley opened the box, and in it he found a note with no outside direction at all, and a nice little flask of corn-juice. He opened the note, and it began thus: "My Darling: Our meeting was so happy ——" when the old Senator stopped. He read no further. "Take," said he, "the d—d thing back to the boy. I know nothing about it." The boy was advised to take it over to the House and see if he could not find a claimant. He did so. A glance at the Congressional directory shows that seat seventy-six on the east side of the Hall of Representatives, is occupied by the festive and warlike J. C. S. Blackburn, of old Kaintuck. A further inspection of that publication will show that the gay Jo is just about the right age to mash and be mashed and have happy meetings with sweet charmers. That flask of corn-juice, too, would remind the jolly Jo of his happy home in the dark and bloody grounds, where every spring that gurgles from the earth has a still backed up against it, and where the juice of the yellow corn is alike the sustenance of the babes and the milk of old age. Anyway, the bouquet and its accompanying box never got back to the Senate end of the capitol, nor was it taken back whence it came.

A LEAVENWORTH paper relates the following: One of the saddest stories ever written has been enacted in the county of Platte, in Missouri. The foundation was laid in a terrible crime at the Platte county fair last September, when Clay Snell, a young man of good family, stabbed and killed a young man named Nathan Andrews. Although public opinion ran high against Snell at the time, the strange and apparently inexplicable events which have occurred of late have tended to create a sympathy for him. He is now in jail at Platte City awaiting trial on the charge of murder, and it is not intended here to speak of the merits or demerits of his case, but to recount the sad circumstances which have happened in his family since the crime was committed, and which has tended to change the current of public opinion in his favor. This is no more nor less than the death of the entire family of the Snells. Shortly after the murder, Mrs. Lucy Ann Standiford, mother of Clay Snell, became very much excited over the murder and grew quite ill. Within a short time she died. Then Robert Snell became ill from what is supposed to be the same cause, and after a lingering sickness, during which time he talked constantly of the family trouble, he passed away, soon followed by his 6 months babe. John Snell, another brother, succumbed to the strain of family excitement, and after a short illness he also died. The past week Miss Nettie Snell, the last but one of the family of one blood, died, and now the news is to the effect that Thomas Standiford, the little 7-year-old half-brother of Clay Snell, is not expected to live, thus leaving the prisoner the only survivor of this doubly unfortunate family—and he in jail awaiting trial on the charge of murder. He is said to have been so crushed with grief at the death of his mother that for some time he was not informed of the other deaths in his family. He pleaded hard to be permitted to gaze upon the face of his mother before she was laid in her last resting place, saying: "Send 100 men to guard me, cover me with chains double locked, but for God's sake let me see the last of my poor old mother." This request, however, was not granted. A more sorrowful chapter of family history never was written.

THE MOSQUITOES OF LAPLAND.

In these latitudes the snow has hardly melted when the mosquitoes appear in countless multitudes, and the people have no rest night or day. In wooded districts they are a perfect plague in July, after which a gnat appears. This bites very hard during the day, but at night leaves one in peace, for it never enters the houses. Last comes a species of sand-fly, which is so very disagreeable. I was surprised, at a turn of the road, to see a black cloud. It was a swarm of mosquitoes, so thick that it was impossible to see anything beyond. I was hurrying the horse through it, when he suddenly stopped, and then I saw three men working on the road who had previously been invisible. This seems incredible, but such are the facts. Josefsson laughed, and observed: "We have a saying here that when a traveler comes he writes his name in a bed of mosquitoes, and when he comes back the following year, he sees it again."—The Land of the Midnight Sun—Paul B. Du Chaillu.

PLUMAGE OF BIRDS.

The plumage of birds is composed of materials which are bad conductors of heat, and are so disposed as to contain in their interstices a great quantity of air, without leaving it space to circulate. For such species as inhabit the colder climates a still more effectual provision is made; for under the ordinary plumage, which is adapted to resist the wind and rain, a still finer and more delicate down is found, which intercepts the heat which would otherwise escape through the coarser plumage.

What the plumage does for the bird, wool for the animal, and clothing for the man, snow does in winter for the soil. The farmer and the gardener look with dismay at a hard and continued frost which is not preceded by a fall of snow. For the snow is nearly a non-conductor, and when sufficiently deep may be considered as absolutely so. The surface may therefore fall to a temperature greatly below 32 degrees, but the bottom in contact with the vegetation of the soil does not share in this fall of temperature, remaining at 32 degrees—a temperature at that season not incompatible with the vegetable organization. Thus the roots and young shoots are protected from a destructive cold.

ONE of the drawbacks of married life is sickness of the little ones. For a Cold or Cough you cannot find a better remedy than Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. Nearly all physicians prescribe it and no family should be without it.

ELECTRICITY is now employed in the rectification of inferior alcohol. The electricity generated by a voltaic battery and a dynamo-electric machine is passed through the alcohol so as to disengage the superfluous hydrogen. By this means beet-root alcohol, which is usually very poor, can be made to yield 80 per cent. of spirits, equal to that obtained from the best maize.

CLEVELAND is taking the lead of all the American cities in testing the practicability of illumination by electricity. An "electric mast" has just been erected in the square in that city 260 feet in height, upon which four lights are to be placed having an illuminating power of from 20,000 to 40,000 candles.

An Ex-Consul's Story.

To the Editor of the Brooklyn Eagle:

A late United States Consul at one of the English inland ports, who is now a private resident of New York, relates the following interesting story. He objects, for private reasons, to having his name published, but authorizes the writer to substantiate his statement, and, if necessary, to refer to him, in his private capacity, any person seeking such reference. Deferring to his wishes, I hereby present his statement in almost the exact language in which he gave it to me,

C. M. FARMER,
1690 Third Avenue, New York

"On my last voyage home from England some three years ago, in one of the Cunard steamers, I noticed one morning, after a few days out of port, a young man hobbling about on the upper deck, supported by crutches and seeming to move with extreme difficulty and no little pain. He was well dressed and of exceedingly handsome countenance, but his limbs were somewhat emaciated and his face very sallow and bore the traces of long suffering. As he seemed to have no attendant or companion, he at once attracted my sympathies, and I went up to him as he leaned against the taffrail looking out on the foaming track which the steamer was making.

"'Excuse me, my young friend,' I said, touching him gently on the shoulder, 'you appear to be an invalid and hardly able or strong enough to trust yourself unattended on an ocean voyage; but if you require any assistance I am a robust and healthy man and shall be glad to help you.'

"'You are very kind,' he replied, in a weak voice, 'but I require no present aid beyond my crutches, which enable me to pass from my state-room up here to get the benefit of the sunshine and the sea breeze.'

"'You have been a great sufferer, no doubt,' I said, 'and I judge that you have been afflicted with that most troublesome disease—rheumatism, whose prevalence and intensity seem to be on an alarming increase both in England and America.'

"'You are right,' he answered; 'I have been its victim for more than a year, and after failing to find relief from medical skill have lately tried the Springs of Carlsbad and Vichy. But they have done me no good, and I am now on my return home to Missouri to die, I suppose. I shall be content if life is spared to me to reach my mother's presence. She is a widow and I am her only child.'

"There was a pathos in this speech which affected me profoundly and awakened in me a deeper sympathy than I had felt before. I had no words to answer him, and stood silently beside him watching the snowy wake of the ship. While thus standing my thoughts reverted to a child—a ten year old boy—of a neighbor of mine residing near my consulate residence, who had been cured of a stubborn case of rheumatism by the use of St. Jacobs Oil, and I remembered that the steward of the ship had told me the day before that he had cured himself of a very severe attack of the gout in New York, just before his last voyage, by the use of the same remedy. I at once left my young friend and went below to find the steward. I not only found him off duty, but discovered that he had a bottle of the Oil in his locker, which he had carried across the ocean in case of another attack. He readily parted with it on my representation, and hurrying up again, I soon persuaded the young man to allow me to take him to his berth and apply the remedy. After doing so I covered him up snugly in bed and requested him not to get up until I should see him again. That evening I returned to his stateroom and found him sleeping peacefully and breathing gently. I roused him and inquired how he felt. 'Like a new man,' he answered with a grateful smile. 'I feel no pain and am able to stretch my limbs without difficulty. I think I'll get up.' 'No, don't get up to-night,' I said, 'but let me rub you again with the Oil, and in the morning you will be able to go above.' 'All right,' he said, laughing. I then applied the Oil again rubbing his knees, ankles, and arms thoroughly, until he said he felt as if he had a mustard poultice all over his body. I then left him. The next morning when I went upon deck for a breezy promenade, according to my custom, I found my patient waiting for me with a smiling face, and without his crutches, although he limped in his movements, but without pain. I don't think I ever felt so happy in my life. To make a long story short, I attended him closely during the rest of the voyage—some four days—applying the Oil every night, and guarding him against too much exposure to the fresh and damp breezes, and on landing at New York, he was able, without assistance, to mount the hotel omnibus and go to the Astor House. I called on him two days later, and found him actually engaged in packing his trunk, preparatory to starting West for his home, that evening. With a bright and grateful smile, he welcomed me, and pointing to a little box carefully done up in thick brown paper, which stood upon the table, he said: "My good friend, can you guess what that is?' 'A present for your sweetheart,' I answered. 'No,' he laughed—'that is a dozen bottles of St. Jacobs Oil, which I have just purchased from Hudnut, the druggist across the way, and I am taking them home to show my good mother what has saved her son's life and restored him to her in health. And with it I would like to carry you along also, to show her the face of him, without whom, I should probably never have tried it. If you should ever visit the little village of Sedalia, in Missouri, Charlie Townsend and his mother will welcome you to their little home, with hearts full of gratitude, and they will show you a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil enshrined in a silver and gold casket, which we shall keep as a parlor ornament as well as a memento of our meeting on the Cunard steamer.'

"We parted, after an hour's pleasant chat, with mutual good will and esteem, and a few weeks afterwards I received a letter from him telling me he was in perfect health, and containing many graceful expressions of his affectionate regards."—Brooklyn Eagle.

REMARKABLE FLOW FROM AN OIL WELL.

Any one familiar with the heavy oil developments knows that a goodly part of the drilling is done on the hill known as the "Point," near Franklin. It rises from the bank of the French creek in a very abrupt manner. Philip Grossman's brewery is situated at the foot of South Park street, on the west side of the creek. His beer vault is on the other side. It is an immense vault, blasted out of solid rock, and penetrates into the hillside nearly 100 feet. In this is stored large quantities of lager beer. The casks that hold the beer contain on an average about ten barrels each. One cask in the rear end of the vault is used as a supply cask. All the others are connected with this one by pipes, and the supply cask, being sunken, is always kept full of beer. The hill at this place is so steep that it cannot be ascended.

Above this vault, on the hilltop, Rial & Son own a lease. They drilled a number of wells on their lease, and they were all profitable. Some time ago they located No. 9 directly over this beer vault. The rig was built and things ran along in the usual manner for about a week. When they had reached a depth of 490 feet, 200 feet less than where they usually find the sand, the drill struck a crevice and dropped away several feet. The tools were withdrawn from the hole and the bailer run. It came up seemingly full of oil. Bail as they would, they could not exhaust the supply. They decided to tube the well, and were ordered to do so by Mr. Rial. The next day the well was tubed without being shot. They commenced to pump it, and it threw the fluid out at a great rate. Noticing something queer about the oil, one of the men tasted it. He found it so good that he put his lips to the pipe and took long gulps of the delicious stuff. First one and then another drank. They became what is known as drunk. The owners visited the well, drank, and were overcome. Operators came to see it, drank, and were overcome. The people of the town who had heard of it went up the hill, drank, and were overcome.

Little by little they came to realize what they had been drinking. One man was found in the crowd who had tasted beer before. He affirmed that it was beer, but they laughed at him. How would this Rip Van Winkle elixir get into the bowels of the earth? At last they decided to call in undoubted authority on the beer question, and sent for Philip Grossman. Grossman came. He tasted it once, twice, and then he tore his hair. "Is it beer?" they asked. "Beer? Yes; it's mein own make. Mein Gott in Himmell, you are pumping mein beer vault dry." Such was the fact, and the way that well was shut down was a caution. They visited the vault and found it to be so. Three of the large casks were empty.—Oil City Derrick.

Poverty and Distress.

That poverty which produces the greatest distress is not of the purse but of the blood. Deprived of its richness it becomes scant and watery, a condition termed anemia in medical writings. Given this condition, and scrofulous swellings and sores, general and nervous debility, loss of flesh and appetite, weak lungs, throat disease, spitting of blood and consumption, are among the common results. If you are suffering from thin, poor blood employ Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which enriches the blood and cures these grave affections. Is more nutritive than cod liver oil, and is harmless in any condition of the system, yet powerful to cure. By druggists.

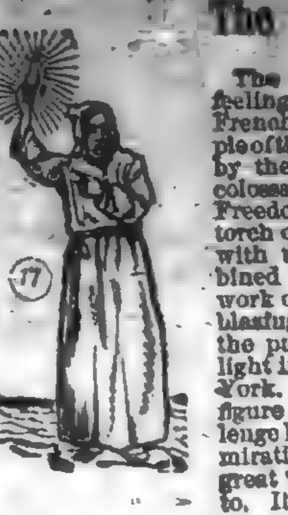
The Illuminator.



The existence of good feeling on the part of the French Nation for the people of this country is shown by the presentation of a colossal bronze figure of Freedom holding aloft the torch of Liberty. Beauty, with usefulness, is combined in this immense work of art, as the bright, blazing torch will serve the purpose of a beacon light in the harbor of New York. There is another figure which will challenge larger praise and admiration than even the great work above referred to. It is illustrated herewith, and represents the aged and worthy ST. JACOB, holding aloft in his hand that beacon which will guide aright all sailing upon the sea of life, whose waters abound with the shoals and dangerous places of sickness and disease. The light it casts is designed to show that ST. JACOBS OIL is the true and trusted means of keeping the body on its proper course, and of easing and "righting it should it be unfortunately cast upon the shoals of rheumatism or other painful ailments. Thousands of grateful ones throughout the world have proved the value and felt the good of this Great German Remedy, and are glad to recommend it to all needing the services of just such a remedy. In this connection Mr. John S. Briggs, a well known citizen of Omaha, Neb., told a newspaper man that he was terribly afflicted with an acute attack of rheumatism in his back. The disease, which had been preying upon him for years had drawn him out of shape. He resorted to every remedy known to physicians, but found no relief until he tried ST. JACOBS OIL, one bottle of which effected a complete and radical cure. Another case may justify reference:

A VETERAN SEAMAN'S TROUBLE.

Editor Inter-Ocean, Chicago, Ill.: I send you this, feeling that the information conveyed will be of material benefit to many of your readers. One of our oldest citizens, Captain C. W. Boynton, the Government Light-house keeper at this point, is probably one of the oldest seamen in America, having sailed twenty-six years on salt water. After this forty-six years' service his eyesight failed him and he kept the Light at Chicago until the Government built the Gross Point Light here, when he was transferred. While seated in my store this morning the Captain volunteered the following written statement: "This is to certify that I have been afflicted with rheumatism for twenty (20) years, both in my side and limbs. I am happy to say that, after using less than two bottles of the ST. JACOBS OIL, I am entirely free from pain, though still limping somewhat when walking, from long force of habit. C. W. BOYNTON." Referring to the foregoing facts, I might allude to numerous similar cases that have come to my notice, but "a word to the wise is sufficient."

TWO VISIONS.

BY AGNES M. MACHAR.

Where close the curving mountains drew
To clasp the stream in their embrace,
With every outline, curve and hue
Reflected in its placid face,

The plowman stopped his team to watch
The train, as swift it thundered by;
Some distant glimpse of life to catch,
He strains his eager, wistful eye.

The morning freshness lies on him,
Just wakened from his balmy dreams;
The travelers, begrimed and dim,
Think longingly of mountain streams.

Oh, for the joyous mountain air,
The fresh, delightful autumn day
Among the hills! The plowman there
Must have perpetual holiday!

And he, as all day long he guides
His steady plow, with patient hand,
Thinks of the flying train that glides
Into some new, enchanted land,

Where, day by day, no plodding round
Wearies the frame and dulls the mind—
Where life thrills keen to light and sound,
With plows and furrows left behind.

Even so, to each, the untrod ways
Of life are touched by fancy's glow,
That ever sheds its brightest rays
Upon the path we do not know!

HOW BIRDIE ESCAPED.

"You have good looks, you have outh, you have address. Come at once nd I will introduce you to a lady whose ortune, with her hand, will repair what ou have wasted."

Rolfe Rathburne threw down his ncle's letter, lighted a cigar and eleated his feet to the table. He knew ery well, he believed, whom his uncle eferred to—a ward of his, Miss Elinor hauncey, who must by this time be of arriageable age, he considered.

"I'm not a marrying man," muttered oung Rathburne, "but when I saw hat girl, eight years ago, she promised o be a beauty; and a man might do orse, perhaps, than to take a pretty ife with plenty of money."

He was a dissipated-looking young an of 25, with a black mustache and urling hair, which he made the most f. He had a fair proportion of brains, ut no morals to speak of. He kept float in good society, however, having knowledge of good breeding, and a ich uncle—the Honorable Christopher Brudenel. The Honorable Christopher Brudenel had written him the above etter. He was partial to his nephew.

Soon the French hotel where Rolfe Rathburne boarded knew him no more. He left these congenial quarters and etook himself to the fatigues of a railay journey.

It had been some years since he had een at Ashdon, his uncle's country ouse. Eight years before, when he as a rather vicious lad of 18, his uncle, a fit of passion, had forbidden him he house; but that was one of the any bygones which Mr. Rolfe Rathburne's relatives were obliged to overook.

Ashdon, with its white front pillars, s green lawns dotted with flower-laden tone urns, its fountains and whispering sh trees—Ashdon looked familiar.

He had walked up from the station, eaving his baggage to be sent for.

"Let me see," he soliloquized, viewg the place from a rise in the road. The girl was 13 when I saw her last— charming little brunette—and they alled her Birdie. She must be 22 now, nd fascinating enough, I'll be bound! onely here! Uncle keeps her secluded, fancy. Good idea! A beauty with a ortune is rather dangerous property to e lying around loose. Wonder what er fancy is in men? Girls always have ome notions of their own. As she is a runette, I suppose I ought to have a ig blonde beard to be killing."

He had reached the gates of Ashdon y this time, when a man with a big londe beard suddenly approached him. He had a package of letters in his hand. Apparently he had just arrived and was a hurry.

"Were you going in?" he asked.

"Yes," said Rathburne.

The man, who was well dressed and of he appearance, selected a letter from he number in his hand.

"I have a letter here for Miss Chauney. Will you be kind enough to deiver it to her personally?"

Rathburne, in good humor, assented ivilly, and the man passed on, walking apidly.

"He's not the postman. A tradesman, robably," mused Rathburne.

The letter was simply addressed, in a lear uniform chirography, "Miss Chauncey, Ashdon." He put it in the reast pocket of his coat, and turning he handle of the iron gates of Ashdon, alked in.

* * * * * * *

Rolfe Rathburne had delivered that etter with kindling eyes. Birdie's dark eyes and rosebud mouth were more charming than anything he had ever seen before.

"Yes," said the Hon. Christopher Brudenel, "my ward is very pretty, and so far she has lived a very secluded life. I have thought it best."

"Has she no other friend or guardian, Uncle Chris?"

Uncle Chris, florid and portly, changed color.

"She is an orphan, quite alone, but for—well, in fact she had another guardian—Aubrey Mordaunt. The rascal wanted to marry her—for her money, you know."

"Of course. What did you do?"

"Told him I had sent her abroad, and sent him posting off to search through ll the convent schools of France to find her. Meanwhile I have sent for you. I want you to marry her. I give you this last chance. Remember, I shall pay no more of your spendthrift bills."

"I shall be very happy, my dear uncle."

Meanwhile Birdie, though it was past midnight, sat in her chamber, looking out into the moon-lighted garden; it had been a year since she had been outside those garden walls. How tired she had grown of its wearisome walks and monotonous stillness, only the bright young thing knew. Her smooth cheeks looked pale in the moonlight; her chin rested in her little hand.

"But if I could only see him once more, I would come back and stay a year contented. I would, indeed! He loves me; he is tender, gentle and kind. I only live, I think, when I am with him. When I am not, I seem to be dying by inches day by day. Do people ever die for love when they are young and healthy as I am, I wonder? No, I think not," sadly said pretty little Birdie to her own sweet self.

And then she turned her mind intently upon other things. Birdie could not sleep that first night of Rolfe Rathburne's coming.

He could not sleep very well himself when he first sought his chamber. Here was an unexampled piece of good fortune. Birdie was so beautiful and bewitching. He would marry her, pay those tormenting debts, set up a city house and enjoy life. He would like to show Birdie to the men of his set—so fresh, so pretty and charming. Wouldn't they grow green with envy? He laughed in the darkness with thinking of it.

Fresh and sweet as a half-blown rosebud Birdie certainly was; but Mr. Rathburne, to his surprise, found her also a little thorny.

No, she didn't care to walk in the garden, and she did dislike cigar smoke, and she wouldn't trouble him to carry her parasol or fan for her.

But wouldn't she show him the goldfish and perch?

They were in the pond, Birdie said, and the maid would give him some crumbs to call them up.

Mr. Rathburne retired discomfited.

"Birdie," said the Honorable Christopher, the next day, "don't you like my nephew?"

"Not particularly," answered Miss Birdie, with rare courage.

The Honorable Christopher stared.

"Hoighty toighty! such airs are not becoming to you, miss! I have invited my nephew here to pay court to you. I require you to treat him civilly. You will do so, of course. You are not of age, remember."

"I will be in two months," replied Birdie, quietly, who seemed to have stitched her eyelids down to her sewing.

The Honorable Christopher was amazed. Was it possible the girl was no longer afraid of him? It could not be. Where had she found courage? No influence averse to his own could possibly have been brought to bear upon her. He took no notice of her last remark, but passed grandly from the room.

But days and weeks passed, and though Birdie would sometimes converse with Rolfe Rathburne, would sometimes let him attend her in feeding her birds in the aviary, and her fish in the fountain, he ever felt the little beauty's disdain.

In vain he oiled his hair and concealed his tobacco. Birdie's lovely eyes looked him over from head to foot coldly. Sometimes, when she was very weary of idleness and dullness, she would consent to play a game or two of chess with him, and she allowed him to teach her to ride horseback—by the Honorable Christopher's directions, taking the most sequestered roads, and attended also by his favorite servant, a fellow with rat-like black eyes, who, riding after, watched her like a ferret. But Birdie did not try to run away, and nobody communicated with her.

"These rides, I suppose they are safe enough," said the Honorable Christopher to his nephew; "but I feel obliged to be a little careful. Mordaunt is a determined fellow. When he finds that he has been deceived, and comes back from France, there is sure to be trouble. But I hope you will have safely married Birdie by that time. Let me see—he will ransack the convents in the shortest possible time, and you understand, I refused to give him the name of the school—and will probably be back here, fierce as a lion, this fall. Birdie seemed to droop this summer. She needs these horseback rides, no doubt; otherwise I should not allow her outside the garden walls. No outside communication with her has been possible for six months."

"You have full control of her money, I suppose?"

"Yes, until she is 21, unless she marries before that time. Mordaunt could take every cent any time, for she always liked him better than she did me, from a child. But you see if you cut him out—"

"I see—I see."

"Well, for heaven's sake, get on a little faster!" grieved the fat honorable, who was privately in misery lest certain liberties he had taken with Birdie's money should be discovered by Mr. Aubrey Mordaunt.

Rathburne thought he was getting on a little next day. A happy smile dimpled Birdie's rosy cheeks all day. Though she seemed lost in her own thoughts, and did not pay very strict attention to her companion's conversation, she allowed him to walk with her, and was far less thorny than usual.

"It's going to be a fine night—moonlight," remarked Mr. Rathburne, when they went in to tea.

Birdie assented.

"It's cooler out of doors, and the fountain will look very pretty by moonlight," she said.

"There's a very comfortable seat—that rustic one, by the fountain."

Mr. Rathburne's heart rose with a bound when Birdie, with a dazzling smile, replied:

"Wait for me there."

At tea he refrained from eating his favorite salad with onions. He rushed up to his rooms, after hurriedly whispering his hopes to his uncle, and drenched his handkerchief with German cologne. Then hastily scribbling a letter to a pressing creditor, to the effect that his bill should be settled soon, he went down and sought the rustic seat by the fountain to wait for Birdie.

He waited until the fountain had flung up and the basin caught a hundred gallons of water—until the whip-poor-wills had whistled themselves hoarse and gone to bed. Sleepy from a sitting posture, weary and stiff from the dampness of the heavy dew, Mr. Rathburne rose, at last, and abandoned his post in despair.

Birdie had not come—certainly was not coming, for (Mr. Rathburne looked at his watch in the moonlight) it was past ten o'clock.

He moved stiffly along the path, entered another, stooped to pick up a letter which lay there. It was addressed to Birdie. Mr. Rathburne thought it looked familiar, somehow. He had no scruples about reading it:

MY DEAR BIRDIE: I know now where you are, and I am near you. Don't grieve any more. Be happy; all will soon be well. As soon as I have taken some steps to ferret out a wrong which is being done you, I will take you out of Brudenel's care. A carriage will wait just beyond the south gate at Ashdon, at 10 o'clock, on the night of Aug. 30, to bear you away with me to become my own beloved wife. I will place you safely in my own house with my mother, while I return to fight Brudenel in his own den. I shall take my own chances of getting this to you by asking the favor of his good-for-nothing nephew to place it in your hands. He comes courting you. I think he will do it. In haste! AUBREY.

There came before Rolfe Rathburne a vision of the fine-looking man with a big blonde beard. He looked up, and stood staring blankly at the open gate of Ashdon. There were the marks of carriage wheels without, and a handkerchief of Birdie's in the dust.

He rushed into the house—to the honorable's bedside, and pounded him awake. Pell-mell they tumbled upstairs to Birdie's room. The cage was empty; the bird had flown.

"The letter—how did she get it?" yelled the honorable. "I have not a servant who dares accept a bribe!"

"I suppose," confessed Birdie's would-be suitor, "that I brought it to her when I came. He was a business-like looking man with a big blonde beard."

"It was," yelled the Hon. Christopher. "We are lost."

As, indeed, they were.

EATING BEFORE SLEEPING.

Man is the only animal that can be taught to sleep quietly on an empty stomach. The brute creation resent all efforts to coax them to such a violation of the laws of nature. The lion roars in the forest until he has found his prey, and, when he has devoured it, he sleeps over until he needs another meal. The horse will paw all night in the stable, and the pig will squeal in the pen, refusing all rest or sleep until they are fed. The animals which chew the cud have their own provision for a late meal just before dropping off to their nightly slumbers.

Man can train himself to the habit of sleeping without a preceding meal, but only after long years of practice. As he comes into the world nature is too strong for him, and he must be fed before he will sleep. A child's stomach is small, and when perfectly filled, if no sickness disturbs it, sleep follows naturally and inevitably. As digestion goes on the stomach begins to empty. A single fold in it will make the little sleeper restless; two will waken it, and, if it is hushed again to repose, the nap is short, and three folds put an end to the slumber. Paregoric or other narcotic may close its eyes again, but without either food or some stupefying drug it will not sleep, no matter how healthy it may be. Not even an angel who learned the art of minstrelsy in a celestial choir can sing a babe to sleep on an empty stomach.

We used the oft-quoted illustration, "sleeping as sweetly as an infant" because this slumber of a child follows immediately after its stomach is completely filled with wholesome food. The sleep which comes to adults long after partaking of food, and when the stomach is nearly or quite empty, is not after the type of infantile repose. There is all the difference in the world between the sleep of refreshment and the sleep of exhaustion.

To sleep well the blood that swells the veins in the head during our busy hours must flow back, leaving a greatly-diminished volume behind the brow that lately throbbed with such vehemence. To digest well, this blood is needed at the stomach, and nearer the fountains of life. It is a fact established beyond the possibility of contradiction that sleep aids digestion, and that the process of digestion is conducive to refreshing sleep. It needs no argument to convince us of this mutual relation. The drowsiness which always follows the well-ordered meal is itself a testimony of nature to this interdependence.—New York Journal of Commerce.

WEBSTER AND CHOATE.

Thirty years ago, when a student of Amherst College, I remember going over with several of my classmates to Northampton, where Daniel Webster and Rufus Choate were opposing lawyers in the great Oliver Smith case. I shall never forget the impression made by great contrast between the manner and gesticulation of those two distinguished pleaders in their closing arguments. The court-room was crowded almost to suffocation, and the immense interest involved, together with the high reputation of the opposing counsel, combined to excite the attention and interest of all to a remarkable degree. Webster's gestures, as well as his words, were comparatively few, but weighty, massive, the very embodiment of dignity and conscious strength. Most of the time during his half-hour argument he stood perfectly motionless, his body slightly bent forward and his hands behind his back.

Choate spoke for nearly two hours in a manner the very counterpart of Webster's, and yet equally appropriate to the speaker's individuality. He was all alert, every vein swelled to fullness, every muscle at its utmost tension. He advanced toward the jury and retreated. He rose on tiptoe, and several times in his excitement seemed to spring up entirely off his feet. He ran his long, nervous fingers through his dark curls, and anon shook them in the air above his head with so swift a motion that they seemed to run into each other like the spokes of a spinning-wheel. His plea lasted two hours. The day was hot and when he had concluded he sank into the arms of his attendants in a state of perfect exhaustion, and was borne out into the lobby like a corpse. The excitement in the court-room was intense, but Webster's calm, stern logic carried the day over Choate's brilliant and fiery rhetoric. The verdict was for Webster and the will.—S. P. Butler.

TWO OHIO GIANTS.

Capt. Martin Van Buren Bates, who lives on a farm near Seville, Ohio, is seven feet eleven and one-half inches high, and weighs 478 pounds. Mrs. Bates is seven feet and eleven inches high and weighs 413 pounds. It is a difficult matter to convey an adequate idea of the proportions of such a dwelling as the one occupied by the Ohio giants. A door that is six feet six inches high is a large-sized opening in the side of a house—that is, a dwelling house, not a cathedral. But the doors in the domicile of the Bates giants are ten feet high, and the knobs are nearly as high as the average man's head.

The house was built by Capt. Bates in 1876, and is elegantly furnished. In the main building on the ground floor are, besides the spacious hall, the bedchamber of the giants, a sitting-room and a parlor. The couch upon which the big couple sleep was made expressly for them, and it is a curiosity to look at. It is extensive enough to give the great people room to stretch in, and it looks as big as an ordinary-sized floor. It is really ten feet long, wide in proportion, and about twice as high as a common bed. The magnificent dressing-case is also a huge affair, with a glass upon it nearly as big as the side of a house. In the sitting-room is a piano of ordinary size itself, but it is mounted on blocks two feet high, so that the instrument is away up in the air, out of the reach of common folks. There are two rocking-chairs in this room that are so big that the reporter had to climb up into one of them the same as an infant would clamber up into a "high chair." It is very expensive for the giants to live, as they have to pay such an exorbitant price for everything they wear. For instance, it costs the Captain $30 a pair for boots.

It is a most astonishing sight to come across the two giants out for a drive. City folks who have seen the ponderous wagons with wheels reaching to the second story of a house, used to haul stones weighing tons and tons, can form an idea of the vehicle used. It is pulled by six stout Norman horses, and it is enough to make a man think he has got 'em, sure, to suddenly meet such a spectacle on the road out in the country. Passing wagons have to let the rails down and drive into the adjoining fields until the giants go by.

HOW CHEAPLY ONE CAN LIVE.

Bread, after all, is the cheapest diet one can live on, and also the best. A story is told that shows just how cheap a man can live when he gets "down to mush," figuratively and literally speaking. Col. Fitzgibbon was, many years ago, colonial agent at London for the Canadian Government, and was wholly dependent upon remittances from Canada for his support. On one occasion these remittances failed to arrive, and as there was no cable in those days, he was compelled to write to his Canadian friends to know the reason of the delay. Meanwhile he had just one sovereign to live upon. He found that he could live upon sixpence per day, or about 12½ cents of our money—four pennyworths of bread, one pennyworth of milk, and one pennyworth of sugar. He made pudding of some of the bread and sugar, which served for breakfast, dinner and supper, the milk being reserved for the last meal. When his remittances arrived, about a month afterward, he had 5 shillings remaining of his sovereign, and he liked his frugal diet so well that he kept it up for over two years, possibly longer. Twelve cents a day is certainly a small amount to expend for food; but a man in Minnesota, about three years ago, worried through a whole year on $16. He lived on "Johnny cake."

We know of a theological student in an Ohio college who, sustained by grace, rice and corn bread, lived thirteen weeks on $7; but there were several good apple orchards near the college, and the farmers kept no dogs. It is not the necessities of life that cost much, but the luxuries; and it is with the major part of mankind as it was with the Frenchman who said that if he had the luxuries of life, he could dispense with the necessities. Mere living is cheap, but as the hymnologist says, "It is not all of life to live."—American Miller.

TWO VISIONS.

BY AGNES M. MACHAR.

Where close the curving mountains drew
To clasp the stream in their embrace,
With every outline, curve and hue
Reflected in its placid face,

The plowman stopped his team to watch
The train, as swift it thundered by;
Some distant glimpse of life to catch,
He strains his eager, wistful eye.

The morning freshness lies on him,
Just wakened from his balmy dreams;
The travelers, begrimed and dim,
Think longingly of mountain streams.

Oh, for the joyous mountain air,
The fresh, delightful autumn day
Among the hills! The plowman there
Must have perpetual holiday!

And he, as all day long he guides
His steady plow, with patient hand,
Thinks of the flying train that glides
Into some new, enchanted land,

Where, day by day, no plodding round
Wearies the frame and dulls the mind—
Where life thrills keen to sight and sound,
With plows and furrows left behind.

Even so, to each, the untrod ways
Of life are touched by fancy's glow,
That ever sheds its brightest rays
Upon the path we do not know!

HOW BIRDIE ESCAPED.

"You have good looks, you have outh, you have address. Come at once d I will introduce you to a lady whose rtune, with her hand, will repair what u have wasted."

Rolfe Rathburne threw down his ncle's letter, lighted a cigar and eleted his feet to the table. He knew ry well, he believed, whom his uncle eferred to—a ward of his, Miss Elinor hauncey, who must by this time be of arriageable age, he considered.

"I'm not a marrying man," muttered oung Rathburne, "but when I saw at girl, eight years ago, she promised be a beauty; and a man might do orse, perhaps, than to take a pretty ife with plenty of money."

He was a dissipated-looking young an of 25, with a black mustache and rling hair, which he made the most . He had a fair proportion of brains, t no morals to speak of. He kept loat in good society, however, having knowledge of good breeding, and a ch uncle—the Honorable Christopher rudenel. The Honorable Christopher rudenel had written him the above tter. He was partial to his nephew.

Soon the French hotel where Rolfe athburne boarded knew him no more. e left these congenial quarters and etook himself to the fatigues of a railay journey.

It had been some years since he had een at Ashdon, his uncle's country ouse. Eight years before, when he as a rather vicious lad of 18, his uncle, a fit of passion, had forbidden him e house; but that was one of the any bygones which Mr. Rolfe Rathurne's relatives were obliged to overok.

Ashdon, with its white front pillars, green lawns dotted with flower-laden one urns, its fountains and whispering h trees—Ashdon looked familiar.

He had walked up from the station, aving his baggage to be sent for.

"Let me see," he soliloquized, viewg the place from a rise in the road. The girl was 13 when I saw her last— charming little brunette—and they lled her Birdie. She must be 22 now, d fascinating enough, I'll be bound! onely here! Uncle keeps her secluded, fancy. Good idea! A beauty with a rtune is rather dangerous property to lying around loose. Wonder what er fancy is in men? Girls always have me notions of their own. As she is a runette, I suppose I ought to have a g blonde beard to be killing."

He had reached the gates of Ashdon y this time, when a man with a big londe beard suddenly approached him. He had a package of letters in his hand. pparently he had just arrived and was a hurry.

"Were you going in?" he asked.

"Yes," said Rathburne.

The man, who was well dressed and of e appearance, selected a letter from e number in his hand.

"I have a letter here for Miss Chauncy. Will you be kind enough to deer it to her personally?"

Rathburne, in good humor, assented villy, and the man passed on, walking pidly.

"He's not the postman. A tradesman, robably," mused Rathburne.

The letter was simply addressed, in a ear uniform chirography, "Miss hauncey, Ashdon." He put it in the reast pocket of his coat, and turning e handle of the iron gates of Ashdon, alked in.

* * * * * * *

Rolfe Rathburne had delivered that tter with kindling eyes. Birdie's dark eyes and rosebud mouth were more charming than anything he had ever seen before.

"Yes," said the Hon. Christopher Brudenel, "my ward is very pretty, and so far she has lived a very secluded life. I have thought it best."

"Has she no other friend or guardian, Uncle Chris?"

Uncle Chris, florid and portly, changed color.

"She is an orphan, quite alone, but for—well, in fact she had another guardian—Aubrey Mordaunt. The rascal wanted to marry her—for her money, you know."

"Of course. What did you do?"

"Told him I had sent her abroad, and sent him posting off to search through ll the convent schools of France to find her. Meanwhile I have sent for you. I want you to marry her. I give you this last chance. Remember, I shall pay no more of your spendthrift bills."

"I shall be very happy, my dear uncle."

Meanwhile Birdie, though it was past midnight, sat in her chamber, looking out into the moon-lighted garden; it had been a year since she had been outside those garden walls. How tired she had grown of its wearisome walks and monotonous stillness, only the bright young thing knew. Her smooth cheeks looked pale in the moonlight; her chin rested in her little hand.

"But if I could only see him once more, I would come back and stay a year contented. I would, indeed! He loves me; he is tender, gentle and kind. I only live, I think, when I am with him. When I am not, I seem to be dying by inches day by day. Do people ever die for love when they are young and healthy as I am, I wonder? No, I think not," sadly said pretty little Birdie to her own sweet self.

And then she turned her mind intently upon other things. Birdie could not sleep that first night of Rolfe Rathburne's coming.

He could not sleep very well himself when he first sought his chamber. Here was an unexampled piece of good fortune. Birdie was so beautiful and bewitching. He would marry her, pay those tormenting debts, set up a city house and enjoy life. He would like to show Birdie to the men of his set—so fresh, so pretty and charming. Wouldn't they grow green with envy? He laughed in the darkness with thinking of it.

Fresh and sweet as a half-blown rosebud Birdie certainly was; but Mr. Rathburne, to his surprise, found her also a little thorny.

No, she didn't care to walk in the garden, and she did dislike cigar smoke, and she wouldn't trouble him to carry her parasol or fan for her.

But wouldn't she show him the goldfish and perch?

They were in the pond, Birdie said, and the maid would give him some crumbs to call them up.

Mr. Rathburne retired discomfited.

"Birdie," said the Honorable Christopher, the next day, "don't you like my nephew?"

"Not particularly," answered Miss Birdie, with rare courage.

The Honorable Christopher stared.

"Hoighty toighty! such airs are not becoming to you, miss! I have invited my nephew here to pay court to you. I require you to treat him civilly. You will do so, of course. You are not of age, remember."

"I will be in two months," replied Birdie, quietly, who seemed to have stitched her eyelids down to her sewing.

The Honorable Christopher was amazed. Was it possible the girl was no longer afraid of him? It could not be. Where had she found courage? No influence averse to his own could possibly have been brought to bear upon her. He took no notice of her last remark, but passed grandly from the room.

But days and weeks passed, and though Birdie would sometimes converse with Rolfe Rathburne, would sometimes let him attend her in feeding her birds in the aviary, and her fish in the fountain, he ever felt the little beauty's disdain.

In vain he oiled his hair and concealed his tobacco. Birdie's lovely eyes looked him over from head to foot coldly. Sometimes, when she was very weary of idleness and dullness, she would consent to play a game or two of chess with him, and she allowed him to teach her to ride horseback—by the Honorable Christopher's directions, taking the most sequestered roads, and attended also by his favorite servant, a fellow with rat-like black eyes, who, riding after, watched her like a ferret. But Birdie did not try to run away, and nobody communicated with her.

"These rides, I suppose they are safe enough," said the Honorable Christopher to his nephew; "but I feel obliged to be a little careful. Mordaunt is a determined fellow. When he finds that he has been deceived, and comes back from France, there is sure to be trouble. But I hope you will have safely married Birdie by that time. Let me see—he will ransack the convents in the shortest possible time, and you understand, I refused to give him the name of the school—and will probably be back here, fierce as a lion, this fall. Birdie seemed to droop this summer. She needs these horseback rides, no doubt; otherwise I should not allow her outside the garden walls. No outside communication with her has been possible for six months."

"You have full control of her money, I suppose?"

"Yes, until she is 21, unless she marries before that time. Mordaunt could take every cent any time, for she always liked him better than she did me, from a child. But you see if you cut him out—"

"I see—I see."

"Well, for heaven's sake, get on a little faster!" grieved the fat honorable, who was privately in misery lest certain liberties he had taken with Birdie's money should be discovered by Mr. Aubrey Mordaunt.

Rathburne thought he was getting on a little next day. A happy smile dimpled Birdie's rosy cheeks all day. Though she seemed lost in her own thoughts, and did not pay very strict attention to her companion's conversation, she allowed him to walk with her, and was far less thorny than usual.

"It's going to be a fine night—moonlight," remarked Mr. Rathburne, when they went in to tea.

Birdie assented.

"It's cooler out of doors, and the fountain will look very pretty by moonlight," she said.

"There's a very comfortable seat—that rustic one, by the fountain."

Mr. Rathburne's heart rose with a bound when Birdie, with a dazzling smile, replied:

"Wait for me there."

At tea he refrained from eating his favorite salad with onions. He rushed up to his rooms, after hurriedly whispering his hopes to his uncle, and drenched his handkerchief with German cologne. Then hastily scribbling a letter to a pressing creditor, to the effect that his bill should be settled soon, he went down and sought the rustic seat by the fountain to wait for Birdie.

He waited until the fountain had flung up and the basin caught a hundred gallons of water—until the whip-poor-wills had whistled themselves hoarse and gone to bed. Sleepy from a sitting posture, weary and stiff from the dampness of the heavy dew, Mr. Rathburne rose, at last, and abandoned his post in despair.

Birdie had not come—certainly was not coming, for (Mr. Rathburne looked at his watch in the moonlight) it was past ten o'clock.

He moved stiffly along the path, entered another, stooped to pick up a letter which lay there. It was addressed to Birdie. Mr. Rathburne thought it looked familiar, somehow. He had no scruples about reading it:

My Dear Birdie: I know now where you are, and I am near you. Don't grieve any more. Be happy; all will soon be well. As soon as I have taken some steps to ferret out a wrong which is being done you, I will take you out of Brudenel's care. A carriage will wait just beyond the south gate at Ashdon, at 10 o'clock, on the night of Aug. 30, to bear you away with me to become my own beloved wife. I will place you safely in my own home with my mother, while I return to fight Brudenel n his own den. I shall take my own chances of getting this to you by asking the favor of his good-for-nothing nephew to place it in your hands. He comes courting you. I think he will do it. In haste!

AUBREY.

There came before Rolfe Rathburne a vision of the fine-looking man with a big blonde beard. He looked up, and stood staring blankly at the open gate of Ashdon. There were the marks of carriage wheels without, and a handkerchief of Birdie's in the dust.

He rushed into the house—to the honorable's bedside, and pounded him awake. Pell-mell they tumbled upstairs to Birdie's room. The cage was empty; the bird had flown.

"The letter—how did she get it?" yelled the honorable. "I have not a servant who dares accept a bribe!"

"I suppose," confessed Birdie's would-be suitor, "that I brought it to her when I came. He was a business-like looking man with a big blonde beard."

"It was," yelled the Hon. Christopher. "We are lost."

As, indeed, they were.

EATING BEFORE SLEEPING.

Man is the only animal that can be taught to sleep quietly on an empty stomach. The brute creation resent all efforts to coax them to such a violation of the laws of nature. The lion roars in the forest until he has found his prey, and, when he has devoured it, he sleeps over until he needs another meal. The horse will paw all night in the stable, and the pig will squeal in the pen, refusing all rest or sleep until they are fed. The animals which chew the cud have their own provision for a late meal just before dropping off to their nightly slumbers.

Man can train himself to the habit of sleeping without a preceding meal, but only after long years of practice. As he comes into the world nature is too strong for him, and he must be fed before he will sleep. A child's stomach is small, and when perfectly filled, if no sickness disturbs it, sleep follows naturally and inevitably. As digestion goes on the stomach begins to empty. A single fold in it will make the little sleeper restless; two will waken it, and, if it is hushed again to repose, the nap is short, and three folds put an end to the slumber. Paregoric or other narcotic may close its eyes again, but without either food or some stupefying drug it will not sleep, no matter how healthy it may be. Not even an angel who learned the art of minstrelsy in a celestial choir can sing a babe to sleep on an empty stomach.

It is not the necessities of life that cost much, but the luxuries; and it is with the major part of mankind as it was with the Frenchman who said that if he had the luxuries of life, he could dispense with the necessities. Mere living is cheap, but as the hymnologist says, "It is not all of life to live."—American Miller.

An Austin clergyman met a prominent saloon-keeper, with whose family he was acquainted. "How is it that I never see you in church?" asked the pastor. "Because I don't go there. ANOTHER PREDICTION.

The end of the world is postponed until 1886. A German paper asserts that a slab has been excavated at Oberemmel, which contains an inscription in Latin which, being translated, means: "When Easter falls on St. Mark's (April 25), and Whit-Sunday on St. Anthony's (June 13), and Corpus Domini on St. John's (June 24), all the world will call for help." This interesting conjunction will take place five years hence. Another authority for the date of the world's doom was the celebrated prophet, Dr. Michael Nostradamus, who was born Dec. 14, 1503, and died at Salon, June 24, 1566.

AN IMPORTANT BILL.

Senator Morgan, from the Committee on Public Lands introduced in the United States Senate, some time since, a bill which is very important to the counties of northwest Alabama and to Mobile. It reads: "A bill granting right of way over the public lands in Alabama, and to grant lands to said State in aid of the Gulf and Chicago Air Line Railway Company, and for the benefit of public schools in said State, and for other purposes." This bill proposes to make a grant of lands to the State of Alabama to aid in building a railroad to connect the Tennessee river at Florence, with the head of navigation of the Black Warrior river at Tuskaloosa.

This road, if built, would be a link in a line of railway from Chicago to Mobile, and thence along the western coast of the bay of Mobile, to deep water at Cedar Point, and would practically be an air line from Chicago to Mobile; the distance between the two cities by this route, would be 789 miles, which is shorter by 100 miles than any existing line, and connects the lakes with the gulf at their nearest approach, by a line as nearly straight as is practicable in railroad building. It would pass through the middle country lying between the Mississippi river on the west and the Alleghany mountains on the east.

The following parts of railroad lines are located and built directly upon this general line, running almost due south from Chicago, viz: the Chicago and Eastern Illinois, from Chicago to Guthrie, Tenn., 395 miles, completed; Dixon to Buffalo Creek in Tennessee, 35 miles, completed; Florence to Tuscumbia Ala., 6 miles, completed, including a splendid bridge across the Tennessee river; Newbern to Uniontown, Ala., 9 miles graded, and from Jackson to Mobile, 59 miles, completed; making 504 miles already graded and constructed, and leaves 285 miles to be constructed to reach Mobile. From Mobile to deep water at Cedar Point, the distance is 31 miles with a road bed graded all the way. This leaves about one-third of the entire line to be constructed.

Such a railroad would be of incalculable advantage to the whole of the western portion of the State, which is now sparsely populated, very little developed, and much in need of railroad facilities. The last clause of the bill which is "for the benefit of public schools in said State, and for other purposes," makes it of still greater importance to the people of Alabama, and it is to be hoped that before the present Congressional session closes, the bill will be taken up and passed.

The Executive Committee of the Democratic and Conservative party of Alabama will meet in Montgomery, on the 30th inst., for the purpose of calling a State Convention, fixing the ratio of representation therein for the counties, and for the transaction of other important business. So in a few weeks the State campaign will be begun.

CHILTON COUNTY.

SOME OF ITS RESOURCES, ADVANTAGES AND CAPABILITIES.

By reference to a map of Alabama, it will be seen that Chilton county is in the very centre of the State. Formed from portions of Bibb, Shelby, Dallas and Autauga, it was made a county, in 1868, and given the name of Baker. Its name was changed, in 1874, by an act of the Legislature, to Chilton, in honor of the late lamented Hon. W. P. Chilton, of Talladega.

The area of Chilton county is about 800 square miles. Its territory is mostly of timber or "piney woods" upland, which makes it one of the healthiest sections of the State. Clanton, the county seat, is situated near the centre of the county, on the South & North Alabama railroad, and is forty miles north of Montgomery, the capital of the State, and 205 miles by rail from Mobile, on the Gulf. The village was so named in honor of the late Gen. James H. Clanton, of Montgomery, whose name will ever be famous in the history of Alabama, along with the names of Rhodes, Lomax and Pelham, in commemoration of the heroic part which he took in the struggle between the States. Clanton is located immediately on the railroad, contains about five hundred inhabitants, and has the reputation, together with two other villages on the same railroad (Verbena and Mountain Creek), of being a pleasant resort during the summer months for persons seeking health and recuperation in the cooling and invigorating breezes of the piney woods. Visitors during these months are numerous.

Two and a half miles east of Clanton, we strike the Coosa river ore beds, which for variety as well as the quality of the mineral, have been pronounced by Dr. E. A. Smith, State Geologist, as among the best in the State. There are to be found along this region (ten by thirty miles of which extends into Chilton county) as many as seven different varieties of ore, which are mica, copper, lead, zinc, coal, iron and gold, the iron deposit being the richest. And steps have been taken to get it to market, a narrow guage railroad having been built from Lomax station, on the S. & N. railroad, for that purpose, the first shipment being made about one week since to Birmingham furnaces. Specimens of our mica and copper ore, of which there are rich deposits, have been presented by the writer to experienced mineralogists, for examination, and both have been pronounced of very fine quality.

Several years prior to the war, Col. Robert Jemison, of Tuskaloosa, from whom the village of Jemison, in this county, took its name, opened gold mines in the section northeast of that station, in what was then Shelby county, and operated them for several years, but from the inexperience of slave labor, he found it unprofitable. Gold was found, however, which resulted in the selling of a great deal of the land in the vicinity, a gentleman of our acquaintance, living in Tuskaloosa, purchasing 500 acres, for which he paid a very high price, and probably much more was sold to other parties.

The South & North Alabama and the Selma, Rome & Dalton railroads traverse the county running parallel nearly due north and south, the distance between them averaging from 16 to 18 miles, and this section is one of the best timber regions of the South.

In an agricultural point of view, though the land is not of the best grade, yet it is found very productive, especially of some crops. A gentleman living in the western part of the county, has the past year been remarkably successful in the culture of rice, and has found it so profitable that he is anxious to purchase other land and cultivate rice on an extensive scale, to the entire neglect of the fleecy king which holds so many of our farmers in complete subjection. The crops which can be profitably raised are corn, wheat, oats, sweet potatoes, peas, Irish potatoes, sugar cane, rice, cotton, when made a surplus crop, and every variety of garden vegetables, besides fruit in the greatest abundance, such as strawberries, melons, peaches, apples, pears, plums, &c. In some sections of the county, the raising of sugar cane is becoming general. One farmer last year off one-third acre planted in cane made 95 gallons of syrup. While another sold off one acre 12,000 stalks at $10 per thousand, making $120, besides having 4,000 stalks bedded for seed. The names of these parties can be furnished if desired. Stock raising is also carried on with profit, and the splendid stock ranges to be found in various portions of the county, would more than treble in value were they put to the proper use. A gentleman, who is giving much attention to sheep farming tells us that better ranges are not be found anywhere. And he has been extensively as well as successfully engaged in sheep farming in the States of Virginia and Georgia.

The climate is mild, lands are cheap and the people refined and hospitable, and always have a welcome for honest and industrious persons seeking a home.

A series of articles might be written setting forth the great advantages offered by Chilton county as a home for industrious immigrants, and after they had come among us, they would be able to repeat the saying that "the half has not been told." A second article will shortly be given on the subject, in which our immense timber resources and valuable water power will be spoken of. Any persons in possession of information or data which they think it would be well to publish, would confer a special favor by furnishing us therewith.

POLYGAMY PESTERED.

Senator Edmunds anti-polygamy bill passed the House, on Tuesday, by 100 to 52, it having already passed the Senate. It makes the crime of polygamy punishable by fine and imprisonment, and a sufficient cause for challenging a juror; legitimates the issue of polygamous or bigamous marriages until after January 1, 1883; disfranchises polygamists, and provides for the appointment of a commission of five persons by the President, the duties of the members being to canvass the election returns and issue certificates of election to persons who are eligible and appear to have been lawfully elected.

These are the main provisions and they will be vigorously enforced in response to the popular pressure. They will probably be as strenuously resisted by the Mormon leaders, and lively times may shortly be expected between Uncle Sam and his Salt Lake Saints.

Senator Hill, of Georgia, is having a great deal of trouble with cancer of the tongue, and late telegrams, as to his condition, state that he will be compelled to give up his position in the Senate.

We paid a visit to Maplesville st week, and found the people of at lively settlement pretty far vanced in their preparations for new crop, considering the excesve wet weather that has visited is section. We were glad to note at the grain crops have not been erlooked. Some of the fields along e S., R. & D. railroad, in both ibb and Chilton, present an enuraging prospect.

A negro man by the name of harles Martin, who had been orking on the new railroad at omax, accidentally met his death n last Monday afternoon. He as complaining of being sick, and ad lain down beneath a number crossties which were resting pon a beam, and serving as a mporary shelter for some of the ands at night. The support happened to give away, and the ties lling upon him crushed him to eath.

We this week give an article on the resources of our county. If any errors or mistatements have been made, we would be glad to have them corrected by any citizen whose experience or position may enable him to be better posted. The following cases on appeal from the circuit court of this county have been acted upon by the supreme court at the present term: Ben Benson vs. State. Abusive language. Affirmed. Alex. Green vs. State. Burg. and Lar. Reversed and remanded. Ben Benson vs. the State. Abusive language. Affirmed. Rehearing granted. Reversed and remanded. The reversal in Green's case virtually acquits him, while in the Benson case a new indictment must be found before the case can be again tried. W. A. Collier, Esq., represented the appellants in both the circuit and supreme courts. The following extract is from the opinion rendered by Chief Justice Brickell, in the Green case:

"Admitting every fact which the evidence tends to prove, it was wholly insufficient to raise a reasonable presumtion that either of the offences of which the appellant was accused, had been committed, and the circuit court should have so instructed the jury. This was the effect of the instruction requested, and it ought to have been given.

It is a great wrong for the court to invade the province of the jury. In avoiding that wrong, the greater one of imperiling the liberty and reputation of the citizen, may be committed by the submission to a jury of criminal accusations in the absence of evidence tending to support them."

MAPLESVILLE DOTS.

Weather mild and balmy, and the opening of Spring is heralded by the songsters of the forest, whose sweet notes cheer the farmer beginning his daily toil, and urge the youthful poet to mount his Pegassus and ride to glory.

Some idea of the magnitude of the advancing business this season may be formed when it is known that one store at this place, holds notes to the amount of $10,000 already.

Plenty of hay to be had around here. Most of the farmers have more than they need.

Corn planting has begun with some farmers, they are acting upon Mr. Cather's advice and planting early.

Considerable sugar cane has been planted. Many desire to raise the red top sorghum, but cannot get the seed. BIJOU.

A SAD STORY.

At Benyaurd's Landing, twelve miles below Wittsburg, Ark., on the St. Francis river, John Patterson, a well-to-do farmer, who resided with his wife and three children, four miles in the interior, lost all of his stock, consisting of twenty mules and about 100 head of cattle by drowning. This so worked upon his mind, seeing the result of so many years of labor swept away in a single night, that he lost his reason, and is now a raving madman. Mr. James Collins, who lives at Benyaurd's Landing, had occasion to go near Patterson's house the other day, and as he was passing by in his dugout, he was hailed by Mrs. Patterson, who cried to him for food. She and her children had been up in the upper story of their dwelling with her crazy husband for two days without anything to eat. Who can picture a scene more sad and sorrowful than this? and yet it is but one of hundreds that the devastating waters have wrought in their destruction of many homes that but a few weeks ago were happy and joyous ones.

TWO GOOD PAPERS FOR PRICE OF ONE.

As the coming political campaign in this State promises to be unusually interesting, the people at large should be fully posted in all matters of general and local importance.

We have made arrangements by which the Montgomery WEEKLY ADVERTISER and THE CHILTON VIEW will be furnished subscribers for $2.60 per year. This is certainly cheap enough to bring the two papers in the reach of all who desire to know what is going on in the State and country at large. The price for both papers is little more than was charged for one a few years ago.

AN HONEST POSTMASTER IN DISTRESS.

The loss by a postmaster of the key to the United States mail lock is a serious matter, punishable by removal from office; and for "having in possession for an improper or unlawful use," a penalty of ten years imprisonment at hard labor is attached. Some postmasters carry their keys in their pockets, leave them lying about their desks or tables, or give them to the baby to play with, resulting in loss of key, annoyance to the business community and recipients of tender missives and sometimes in robbery of the mail, all of which might be prevented by fastening the key to the desk or table by a cord or chain.

The following letter recently received at the Postoffice Department shows what perplexity and agony might be avoided by proper care.

Name of postoffice and postmaster are withheld by request:

SERGEANT MASON'S IMPRISONMENT.

WASHINGTON, March 17.—Gen. Ayres, the Commandant at the Washington Barracks, said to-day that the departure of Sergeant Mason for the Albany Penitentiary on Wednesday had nothing whatever to do with the habeas corpus proceedings. The order for the removal of the prisoner was expected on Tuesday, and in anticipation of it all arrangements were made, so far as possible, for his immediate removal. The order came at 9 o'clock on Wednesday morning, and arrangements were at once made for his departure at 1 o'clock, as it was deemed advisable to have Mason arrive in Albany in the day time. "All of this," said Gen. Ayres, "was ordered and completed before Mr. Biglow came here and before I had any intimation of any purpose to seek a writ of habeas corpus. I did not think then that I was justified in stopping the execution of the order."

POOR BEN HILL.

Cincinnati Commercial special: Senator Hill, of Georgia, remarked to-day to a friend who called to see him that his life was all behind him; he was sitting there and waiting for the end simply. He was easier than for some days, but without hope of permanent alleviation of his symptoms. He has had four surgical operations performed without permanent relief. The last operation was the removal of one of the parotid glands, which became so inflamed as to necessitate this severe treatment. The incision now refuses to heal, and is discharging pus constantly into the mouth. It transpires that Mr. Hill himself has indulged no hope of cure from the first, as he lost a sister and a brother from cancer, and it is hereditary in the family. The physicians are contemplating the necessity of a fifth operation to prolong the Senator's life.

JEMISON JOTTINGS.

Weather very fine for the last few days and our farmers are busy.

Dr. McNeill is having a large grist mill erected.

A thief broke into the store of Mr. J. O. Smith one night last week, and stole a watch and chain and a few other articles. He got in by tearing up the hearth.

We are always glad to hear from "Bijou" and "Local" and would like to hear from the latter more regularly.

A good school will be opened here shortly. EGO.

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
AND SPERMATORRHŒA.

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. FULL DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

INDIAN BOWS AND ARROWS.

One day, in the editorial room of Forest and Stream, Dr. Carver, the renowned shot, told what he knew about bow and arrow:

"You see," said Dr. Carver, as he deposited a whole sheath of brightly-feathered arrows on a table, took off his umbrageous felt and drew up a chair, "I must be shooting something or other all the time. If it isn't a Winchester it's a bow and arrow.

"Pretty they are, but most too fine Fancy things, these arrows, for handsome young ladies to shoot on grass plats at straw targets. Now, an Indian arrow is a good bit longer—maybe thirty-two inches—and when a Sioux draws it chock up to the bow it fairly hums when he lets it fly.

"An Indian arrow has grooves cut in it behind the barb—that is to say the ones used in hunting—so that the blood can flow; otherwise the wood would spoil and swell. The fighting arrows are nasty things. The barb is so put on the shaft that when it hits you the steel, or old hoop-iron, stays in the flesh when you go to pull out the arrow.

"Dear sakes! what ugly wounds I have seen them make. An Indian boy begins to handle a light bow when he toddles—maybe at 4 or 5 years. His bow is taller than he is. He shoots at most anything around the camp. When he is 12 he uses sharp arrows. A boy must be strong at 18 to use a man's bow.

"Now, a white man who takes an Indian bow for the first time has all he can do to bend it. It wants some strength but more knack. The bow is made straight. When it is strung the cord, even when in tension, almost touches the bow. It is thick, some four and a half to five feet long—that is, their hunting bow—and has extra stiffening by having sinews pasted on it.

"I have seen We-shessa-has-ka—that's the Long Man, and he was the best of Ogallala Sioux—kill an antelope with his arrows at 125 measured yards.

"We-shessa-has-ka was nearly seven feet tall, and a good Indian. On horseback, broadside to a buffalo, I have more than once known that Indian to send an arrow through a big cow. The arrow hung out on the other side.

"The bow for horseback and for war is a trifle shorter, and, maybe, stiffer. You do not draw the arrow to the eye, but catch aim as I do when shooting from the hip.

"That can only be acquired by long practice. The string is drawn by the clutch of the whole fingers, though some of the tribes use the thumb and three fingers. The Long Man could shoot an arrow in the air out of sight."

FERRETS.

The full-grown ferret is about fourteen inches long, and is noted for its great strength and boldness. Ferrets are bred quite extensively in Europe for hunting rabbits, rats and mice. Though regarded as a domesticated animal, the ferret is far from docile, and never shows an affection for those who care for it. The natural instinct of the animal is so strong that it does not need to be trained to attack its prey, though practice improves the animal in its work, the chief gain being in allowing themselves to be more readily caught. The ferret is always muzzled to prevent it from killing its prey; if this precaution is not taken, it will suck the blood of its victim, and fall into a sleep from which it will not arouse until the food is digested. When sent out muzzled, the ferret will return after the hunt to receive food. It runs into the burrows of the rabbits, for which animal the ferret seems to have natural enmity, and drives the timid creatures out, where they are caught in nets and snares set for them. A ferret will soon rid a house of rats and mice, and it is for this reason principally that the animal is now bred and cared for by man.

A MUNIFICENT gift has been proffered to the city of Baltimore by Mr. Enoch Pratt, President of the National Farmers' and Planters' Bank of that city. At a cost of over $1,000,000 he proposes to establish and endow a free circulating library for the benefit of the entire city, provided that the municipal corporation will create an annuity of $50,000 for the perpetual support and maintenance of the library and its branches. Mr. Pratt has already contracted for the erection of a fire-proof building which will cost $225,000 and will hold 200,000 volumes. This building, together with the site, he will deed to the city, and will make a cash donation of $833,000, subject to the provision by the city of the annuity of $50,000, the institution to be known as the Pratt Free Library.

"WHY is a lady unlike a mirror?" asked a cynic of a lady. She "gave it up." "Because," said the rude fellow, "a mirror reflects without speaking; a lady speaks without reflecting." "Very good," said she. "Now answer me. Why is a man unlike a mirror?" "I cannot tell you." "Because the mirror is polished and the man is not."

CALICO PRINTING IN AMERICA.

Amasa, the father of William Sprague, laid the foundation of calico printing in this country in 1828, and erected his mill on the site of his present Cranston print works. The difficulties which young American printers were obliged to overcome were stupendous. For a long time Amasa struggled with almost insurmountable difficulties, displaying a perseverance seldom seen. Sometimes the fabrics were ruined by the acids, and sometimes the colors would run together and produce the most disastrous results.

The difficulties seemed to increase in number. Thousands and thousands of yards were often ruined, and what were then considered small fortunes were more than once lost in this way. Amasa Sprague, however, was not to be foiled, and he determined to go to Europe to see how the business was done there. He knew beforehand that it was the purpose of the English manufacturers to conceal their process of the art of dying, bleaching and printing. The only way, then, was for him to secure work in some establishment, and this he succeeded in doing for the compensation of only a few shillings a week. Step by step he gained favor and advancement from his employers, until at last, to his great happiness, he was promoted to some position in the coloring-room, where he learned the long-coveted art. When he felt satisfied that he had acquired sufficient knowledge of it he returned home. He started his print-works in the town of Cranston, and gradually advanced in prosperity.

"BE yer takin' much interest in politics this fall, Bill?" asked the first tramp. "Skursely," answered the second tramp; "but I expect to be runnin' for suthin' myself purty soon." "What do you s'pose yer'l run fur, Bill?" "The poor-house wagon."

Tony Pastor in Trouble.

Tony Pastor, of New York, who is now with his inimitable variety combination, making a tour of the principal cities of the Union, is recognized as the leading character vocalist and variety performer of the United States. He owns and runs a first-class theatre on Broadway, New York City, and has gathered about him the best troupe of variety artists that could be obtained. The company has just completed a brilliant engagement at the Walnut-street Theatre, Philadelphia, and after the present tour they will reappear in Tony Pastor's own theatre in New York City. Mr. Pastor is the originator of his peculiar school of character singing, and has made himself immensely popular, having realized by his talents a large fortune.

The writer of this article met Mr. Pastor recently at the Bingham House, in Philadelphia, and found him as genial in private as he is amusing before the public. During our conversation I inquired as to his physical health, and he replied that, notwithstanding the strain upon him in the discharge of his professional duties, it was excellent. He had occasionally severe pains, either the result of rheumatic attacks or colds, but any complaints of that character never troubled him long, as he had found out a remedy for all such annoying affections. I asked him what the remedy was, and he replied, "St. Jacobs Oil." I then learned from Mr. Pastor that he considered the Great German Remedy an excellent preparation for the cure or relief of rheumatism, and that it was about the only thing used among professional people for that distressing complaint. He took bottles of it with him whenever he went traveling, and would not be without it, and knew that it was very popular with a number of members of his own company. A conversation held subsequently with various members of the organization revealed the fact that St. Jacobs Oil had been performing most invaluable service for them in the way of curing them of rheumatism. Nearly every artist in the troupe used it, and was enthusiastic in its praise, and the writer was really forced to the conclusion that Tony Pastor was certainly in luck in having so valuable an article known and employed by his inimitably good company of performers, for it enabled every one to be always in his place, thus insuring comfort to the management and genuine satisfaction to the public. Tony Pastor would certainly be in trouble without St. Jacobs Oil. At least, other managers whose artists have been temporarily unsupplied, have noticed the difference between St. Jacobs Oil in stock and St. Jacobs Oil out of stock—among the members of their companies.—*N. SEVERAL American millionaires have during the past few years by their wills violated the spirit of American law and aped that of England. The spirit of republican law divides an estate among children alike, and knows no favorite elder son. That it provokes ill feeling and embitters those nearly related needs no facts to prove. Such attempts to build up a family name by money should meet the public disapproval. Commodore Vanderbilt's was a glaring case. Old John Anderson recently died, leaving an estate of about $5,000,000 to his son John, and an annuity to his daughters of $3,000 per year. Men who are making their wills should not allow their pride in a family name to persuade them to do so plain an act of injustice to their families, and so open a thrust at the unwritten law of the republic.

An Open Letter.

MESSRS. ELLIS & Co.—It affords me great pleasure to make the following statement: For FOURTEEN YEARS I have been constantly suffering from chronic hæmaturia—the hemorrhage being at aimes very great, and at no time entirely trrested. The accompanying congestion of the kidneys frequently was acutely painful. I have had treatment by the best physicians, but their skill gave me no relief. The wide-spread celebrity of the Bailey Springs, in the cure of affections of the urinary organs, determined me to try them. I have been here two weeks and am entirely relieved. Indeed, in less than one week, all appearance or sensation of disease had disappeared as if by magic. I leave for home to-day, and make this voluntary statement, believing that too much cannot be said in regard to the wonderful effects of the waters here. Very truly yours,

N. W. WARD,

COLD COMFORT.

"TRUE AS PREACHING."

Next to short crops, drought and the Missouri floods perhaps the rheumatism is most to be dreaded. A man may be able to attend to business with the chills and fever and other such minor troubles, but we defy any one to think of anything but securing relief while suffering with acute pain. To secure a relievant therefore, which reduces the suffering to the minimum and the quickest to relieve pain is a great blessing. This remedy appeared in the shape of the Great German Remedy, St. Jacobs Oil, several years since and has been steadyily growing in popularity. Mr. Charles Young, editor of the Staats Zeitung, says of it:

"Many folks may think that the merits claimed for St. Jacobs Oil are not to be found in this wonderful liniment. One hot summer night I was compelled to get out of bed and go the open window. The cool breeze seemed to do me a great deal of good, so I concluded to cool off entirely before going back to bed again. I fell asleep on the chair, and upon awaking in the morning found that I had a rheumatic pain in my left shoulder. Having heard of the wonderful cures that had been made by St. Jacobs Oil, I concluded to try a bottle. After the first application I felt greatly relieved, and after using the liniment the second time I was freed from all pain, and have not had any signs of rheumatism since. Many of my friends have also availed themselves of the great curative properties of the great remedy, and I know of no single instance in which it has failed to do what was expected of it."

Mr. E. S. Seymour, who has recently purchased and refitted Nebraska City's best hotel, the Grand Central, says the St. Jacobs Oil seems to be in great demand among the traveling public. Both here and at his former place in Chicago his guests resort to the Great German Remedy for the alleviation of rheumatic pain, and he long since came to regard it as a specific not to be omitted when pain was mentioned. The Oil is a favorite for the cure of burns, bruises and sprains, and he has known good results to flow from its application in this regard.

Mrs. Cottrell, who is a guest at the Grand Central Hotel, sprained her hand not long since, and was cured by the application of St. Jacobs Oil. She thinks it a peerless remedy for the relief of pain.

Mr. L. Wessel, Jr., editor of our sprightly little monthly, the Phunny Phellow, says he has seen the St. Jacobs Oil act most happily in the family of which he is a member, when applied for burns, headache, etc. From what he has seen of it he considers it a splendid relievant.

Mr. Joseph Davis, night policeman in Nebraska City, was cured of rheumatism by the free application of St. Jacobs Oil.

Mr. Robert Hawke, the leading merchant of Nebraska City, was seen by the reporter in connection with the achievements of the St. Jacobs Oil. Mr. Hawke said that the remedy is very popular in his family as a general household remedy. It is a specific for the various pains incident to burns, sprains, bruises, etc., and a bottle is generally kept open ready for use in his house.

It is very remarkable, to say the least of it, that a remedy should win such ready and general endorsements as the above indicates. What will cure one will not always cure all. But the St. Jacobs Oil strikes heavy blows for good all round, and its virtues are lauded upon every hand. Try it, all ye who suffer

COMFORT BY THE WAY.

The small boy's idea of genuine comfort and happiness was to be pitched into a pond of ice cream whose shores were made of sponge cake. His misery was the absence of these pleasant substances. That boy simply represents humanity. Comfort is appreciated by contrast—we enjoy a thing in proportion to our conception of the disadvantages of our deprivation thereof. This applies to material things as well as to immaterial considerations. The icicle, whose appearance in the wintry cold and bleakness sends the shiver of discomfort through the observer, would suggest notions of the coolest comfort in hot and sultry days of the summer season. And in both seasons—that in which the icicle flourishes best and in the one wherein its absence is conspicuous—that most uncomfortable and torturing disease, rheumatism, plentifully abounds, causing pain and agony to myriads of people. And yet it need not be thus afflictive if sufferers would only use ST. JACOBS OIL, the surest safest and speediest remedy in the whole world for the eradication and cure of rheumatism and all painful ailments. The following from the Rochester (Ind.) Sentinel shows how some people attend to their rheumatism: "When a young husband had gone from home, and with fond solicitude telegraphed his little wife—'What have you for breakfast, and how's the baby?' he received the brief, practical and suggestive reply—'Buckwheat cakes and the measles.' We have the report of a case in our midst, not where measles was in the bill of fare, but where sciatic rheumatism confined Mr. J. Dawson, the well-known Rochester druggist, to his room for a long period. It was stated to our reporter in the following words: 'The senior member of this firm was attacked with sciatic rheumatism about December 10th last, and for four weeks succeeding Feb. 10th, could scarcely leave his room. He used ST. JACOBS OIL, and is now able to be at his place of business, feeling not much the worse for his recent affliction. The inference is convincing. The run which ST. JACOBS OIL is having is, we say, unprecedented, and the article is rapidly displacing all other rheumatic remedies as fast as its virtues become known.

"Edgar T. Paige, Esq., druggist, writes us from Chicopee Falls," says the Springfield (Mass.) Republican, "that Mr. Albert Guenther, under Wild's Hotel, has used that remarkable remedy, ST. JACOBS OIL, for a severe case of rheumatism, and it cured him as if by magic."

SURPRISE.

BY HERBERT HALL WINSLOW.

With [illegible] low, upon the river's brink,
The restless, aimless waters idly beat;
The grazing cattle droop their heads to drink,
The ripples flowing gently o'er their feet;
The hazy stillness and the summer air
[illegible] dreams, devoid of care.

All changed and cheerless in the wintry wind
That sweeps from shore to shore in sullen mood
The river rests, in ghostly shroud confined,
And blustering breezes sing a requiem rude.
The slow herds shivering in the fallen snow,
Scatter its powdered paleness as they go.

And thus in life, a winter cold and drear
Fast follows on the summer's joyous bloom;
And while we wait, and idly wander here,
Time's tocsin sounds some dreaded day of doom;
And starting up, with pleasure-laden mind,
We see the smiling summer far behind!

A WILD RIDE.

We had been living in Ireland for about two years, and every day I regretted the time more and more when my husband had decided to leave England and come over to manage his property, which was situated in one of the most lawless and disaffected counties.

Fenianism was rife, and heartily I wished we were away and over the water again, at least until these troubled days had given place to better and more peaceful times, and now that the long, dark winter afternoons and evenings had set in again, I used to sit and watch anxiously for my husband's return; when Lionel would come in looking moody and uneasy, and kept his revolver always loaded, though he never told me he suspected danger, and tried to make light of it for my sake.

Oh! it was a wretched, miserable time, and I can never forget it.

I remember so well how the crash came at last, and how the volcano burst forth that had been smouldering so long.

We were sitting at breakfast one morning when the letters were brought in, and after handing them the bearer stood fidgeting about.

Lionel looked up.

"That will do, Delaney, and tell John to bring the dog-cart around in half-an-hour."

"Lionel, I don't like that man," I said, after he had left the room. "I am sure he is a spy. I wish you would get rid of him."

"Oh, the fellow is right enough. It is his brother, you know, that I am going over to the court about to-day."

"What is it?" I exclaimed, as Lionel got up suddenly, looked vexed and annoyed, and threw a letter into the fire. "Lionel, is it another of those dreadful letters?"

"Yes, warning me against giving evidence against Delaney to-day. What is the country coming to? But there; I ought not to have told you—it will frighten you into fits."

"Lionel, you must not go to-day—indeed, indeed, you must stay at home; they may mean what they say. Oh, promise me you won't go."

"Nonsense — absurdity; Winifred, don't be so foolish. Why, dear, these are all empty threats. But once show the white feather and they will be ten times worse. You foolish little wife," he added, tenderly, "and so you worry and fret yourself when I am away, expecting me home on a shutter, I suppose. Well, don't sit up for me to-night, for after the trial is over I am going to dine at Col. Arbuthnot's, and shan't be home till late. Now I must be off."

A few more loving words, and then I stood watching him driving down the avenue, turning now and then to wave a farewell.

I was only half satisfied, and was wishing he had not gone.

After lunch I went out to take some wine to the lodge-keeper's child, who was ill.

It was rather late when I started, and the sun was setting behind the mountain, shedding a flood of crimson light over the golden glories of the fading year.

I stayed there till it was quite dark, when I started home.

Suddenly hearing footsteps, I paused; nearer and nearer they came, and then through the darkness I could see two men slowly approaching, talking in low, earnest tones.

Sick with terror, I drew back behind a large tree, for one of the men was Delaney.

At first they spoke in low, cautious tones, but, by degrees, their voices were raised, and at last Delaney, raising his hand, exclaimed, with a vehemence that made me shudder:

"I tell you, if it's done at all, it must be done to-night. What's the use of talking, man? It's acts, not words, we want. He passes the cross-roads to-night, coming home from the Colonel's, a mile beyond, by the common and the chalk-pit. It's a lonely spot—there's our place. Be there when the moon is up, and mind, no mistake this time."

And he laughed, actually laughed, as he planned and plotted the cruel and deliberate murder of my husband, who had been a kind and good master to him.

At last they parted, Delaney hurrying back in the direction of the house with a last injunction to his accomplice not to fail, and, after waiting a long time, to make sure that he was gone, I went slowly home, and reached my room unobserved.

There I matured and laid my plans deliberately and carefully, for it was life if I succeeded, and oh! far worse than death if I failed.

So I dressed for dinner as usual, and, though every scrap of color had left my face, and I knew that I could not subdue all expression of the horror that I felt, I preserved an outward calmness, and went on down to the dining-room as though the man that stood behind my chair had not, only two short hours ago, planned to take my husband's life.

How I got through I know not, but the meal was over at last.

Still I could do nothing till Delaney left the house and started on his deadly errand.

My plan was this.

When he had gone I intended to go down to the stable, get the horse, and ride to Col. Arbuthnot's, trying to reach it before Lionel had started on his way home.

It was a daring step, but the only chance; lonely and isolated, we were miles from any town, and no help was possible.

I should have to ride hard, and, to avoid being discovered and stopped, I must make a long round, which would take me many miles out of my way.

At last the time to act had arrived.

Delaney must have started long ere this, and the servants would be at supper.

The clock was just striking 9 as I left the room.

Going up-stairs quickly, I put on my habit and stepped out.

It was a clear, bright night, with the pale moon rising over the dark tree-tops, and shining coldly on the glossy green evergreens, casting ghostly, weird shadows across the path. I reached the yard, and saw, to my alarm, a light in the harness-room. Without taking time to hesitate or think, I advanced softly, and, peeping in, saw, to my great relief, that it was only the stable-boy busily engaged rubbing up the harness. Opening the door, I stood before the astonished lad, who gazed with wide-open eyes as though I had been an apparition.

"Christie," I said, "saddle Rifleman as quickly as possible. I want him."

"Sure, ma'am, you're never going out to-night?"

"Yes, I am. Quick—don't stand talking there, but do as I tell you."

Burning with impatience, I watched him getting out Rifleman, and then, as I was about to mount, catching sight of the wonder and surprise on Christie's face, an idea seized me, and, sending him back into the stable on some pretext, I locked the door and took the key. No one knew where I was; it would be long before he could make himself heard, no matter how loudly he called, for the yard was a long way from the house. In another minute I was out of the gate and cantering swiftly down the avenue and out on the open road. "Rifleman," I said, stroking his glossy neck, "it rests with you to save your master. You must do your best for the time is short."

Away we went, keeping well in the shadow of the trees which skirted the road; the soft grass muffled the sound of the horse's hoofs, and faster, yet faster, I urged Rifleman to his topmost speed, for what if I were already too late? The moon was nearly high in the heavens, and I knew the hour was rapidly approaching. It was a ride for life, and on we flew with fearful rapidity.

What if Lionel were on his way already. Oh for strength to keep up a little longer!

The entrance gates at Col. Arbuthnot's stood wide open, and, with hope in my heart, I galloped up to the house. The door was opened by the Colonel himself, who hurried out in great alarm.

"My husband—is he here?" I gasped.

"No; he has just left—not more than ten minutes ago, I think; but what has happened?"

"Too late! too late!" I cried. "They have killed him! Oh, Lionel, Lionel!"

They tried to stop me, but I broke away; there might be time yet, if I rode hard and fast. My horse might die in the attempt—what mattered it? It was life or death, now; and away again, thundering down the avenue I went, heedless of cries and entreaties to come back.

Stopping one moment to listen, I heard, far ahead, the rumbling sound of wheels; it seemed to endow me with new life and strength to keep up, to struggle a little longer; but poor Rifleman was almost done for. Breathing hard, he still labored on, answering whip and rein to the last.

Gathering up all my energies for a last effort, I urged Rifleman once more to a gallop, and, sweeping round a corner, saw, with a wild gleam of joy and hope, my husband's dog-cart slowly ascending a long steep hill, right in front, the foot of which on the other side was the spot where the murderers were in waiting. Every yard of ground was of value now.

I tried to call out, but only a feeble cry escaped my lips; and, still running with a kind of strength and determination born of despair, I pushed on, till suddenly all grew dim and indistinct. I was conscious only of a great and terrible darkness rising and hiding my husband from my sight; struggling on blindly with outstretched hands I staggered a few steps, and then, with a last wild wail of "Lionel—Lionel!" fell senseless upon the earth—my last thought, my last desire being to save him. Was it all in vain?

* * * * *

When I opened my eyes I found myself in a cottage, in the bright glare of a turf fire, with a crowd of eager and frightened sympathizers around, and Lionel bending, white and anxious, over me. It was enough to know that he was safe—to cling tightly to him and feel his strong, protecting arms around me—and, weak, tired and exhausted, I fainted again.

It had been a very narrow escape after all. Lionel had just reached the top of the long hill when he heard my cry, and, driving hastily back, had found me, to his great astonishment, lying insensible, and Rifleman standing beside me. Presently, Col. Arbuthnot, who had followed in hot haste, had come up, and they had carried me into the cottage, wondering greatly what it meant. And I told my story.

Had I been a minute later, in all human probability I should never in this world have heard his voice again.

Delaney waited in vain that night, and whether he guessed or suspected that his plot had been discovered was never known, for ere morning dawned he had fled and succeeded in making his escape from the country. Lionel and Col. Arbuthnot did all they could to have him brought to justice, but in vain—he was never heard of.

We left Ireland before Christmas, for I could not bear to stay there after all I had gone through, and I never wish to see it again. As for Rifleman, I will never part with him; the good horse that carried me so well that memorable night shall have a happy home and end his days in peace; but for him I should never have won that terrible race.

THE movement for Canadian independence is much more widespread and formidable than the Tories are willing to admit. As a sample of what is going on among the native Canucks to become emancipated from British control, a recent dispatch from Montreal says: "The Club National, of this city, composed of young Canadians, and affiliated with the Liberal party of the Dominion, has unanimously passed a series of resolutions declaring for full and complete independence for Canada. They say the colonial regime has no further raison d'etre on the American continent; that our commercial relations demand an absolute right to make our own commercial treaties; that the protectorate of the mother country is a source of weakness instead of security, and a standing threat against peace and tranquillity; that independence will open a new horizon to the activity and ambition of Canadian citizens, who should no longer remain in dependence, inferiority and vassalage. The resolutions conclude by calling on the Liberal party to make independence the chief plank in their platform."

A NICE QUESTION.

A question has arisen in regard to the right or propriety of a professor of an agricultural college, and consequently an employe of the public, acquiring a personal property in any discovery or invention he may happen to make in such employment. The facts are as follows:

Two of the professors of the Illinois Industrial University were employed in making experiments in producing sugar from sorghum. These experiments were so successful that the professors have patented the processes used in their own names and as their own property. As the question of the propriety of this course has arisen, the Principal of the university, under his own signature, has publicly defended it. But in the defense he makes use of the following extraordinary words in regard to the discovery becoming public property: "'Becoming public property' sounds well; is a fine sentiment; but as a sentiment it would be just as nice to say the 'dear public' should own, as a public, all the property in the State." Principal Scott uses an illustration which completely takes the ground from under his own feet; for the dear public do really and in fact own all the property in the State, the apparent owners being simply occupiers, subject to the eminent domain and rights of the State. The State can, by due process of law, take possession of any person's farm or house and put it to public uses, and in every grant of land to an individual this precedent right is reserved. Moreover, the State can take a person's property and his person and use them for its own service when it is thought necessary by the State Government. The question is a narrow one. Must the farmers of Illinois and of other States be compelled to pay a tax to persons who, in the course of their employment in a public capacity and while under public pay, discover any methods for processes which they are employed to discover? These gentlemen were certainly employed to experiment in making sugar. The cost of making the experiment was paid out of the university funds, which are public moneys. To whom, then, do the results of these experiments belong? Is the public to be satisfied with a long table of figures showing the results, while the methods of producing these results are kept secret and are reserved as the private property of the experimenters, for which those persons for whom the experiments were made—the farmers—must pay if they desire to use them?—Country Gentleman.

NOT A CRANK.

A young fellow in England was recently invited to visit an old gentleman who had a "mania" for pedigree or genealogy. As he had also a reputation for his dinners and his wines, the young man stood a good deal of talk about his host's ancestors for the sake of the other things; but when the old gentleman took him through his picture gallery, and, showing him a portrait of an old fellow painted 200 years before—the time of James II.—and said that it was a portrait of his father-in-law; and another of his brother-in-law, who, at the age of 18, fought at Edgehill in 1642 (being born in 1624); and a third of his nephew, who at the time of his death was ninety-two years older than his uncle, the guest got out of that house at the earliest possible moment. He was dealing with a "crank." As it turned out, however, the old gentleman was correct. For his "brother-in-law," at the age of 78, married, in 1703, a young girl of 17. Her father was at that time a young man, but he, too, married when very old and had children, his youngest being born in 1739. In 1816, when she was 77 years old, the old gentleman who owned the picture gallery married her, he being 19 at the time. So that the old gentleman's father-in-law was, as he said, alive in the time of James II. But as this father-in-law had a son-in-law many years older than he was, this gave the old gentleman a brother-in-law who would have been 257 years old if he had lived until 1881. As this brother-in-law died soon after his marriage, his young widow married again, and had a son who was born ninety-one years before his uncle (by marriage) was born, so that old gentleman was not a lunatic, unless it was when at the age of 19 he married a woman nearly 60 years older than he was.

GEORGE I. SENEY, President of the Metropolitan National Bank of New York, who recently presented the Brooklyn library with $60,000, has given to religious, charitable and educational institutions no less than $1,465,000.

THEY NEVER GET OVER IT.

"Do you know, my dear," she suddenly said as she looked up from her piece-work—"do you know that next week will be the twentieth anniversary of our wedding?"

"Is that so? By George! how time flies! Why, I had no idea of it."

"Yes, we have been married almost twenty long years," she continued, with something of a sigh. "You have been a good husband to me, darling."

"And you have been a blessed little wife to me, Susan. Come here till I kiss you. There!"

"I was thinking to-day—I was thinking of—of—"

"Of that sickly-faced baboon who used to go home with you from prayer meeting before I knew you?" he interrupted.

"Who do you mean?"

"Why, that Brace fellow, of course."

"Why, George, he wasn't such a bad fellow."

"Wasn't, eh? Well, I'd like to know of a worse one. He didn't know enough to chew putty, and there you were as good as engaged to him."

"Yes, George, but you know you were keeping company at that same time with that Helen Perkins."

"That Helen Perkins? Wasn't Miss Perkins one of the loveliest and prettiest young ladies in the whole country?"

"No, she wasn't! She had teeth like a horse?"

"She did, eh? How about that stoop-shouldered, white-headed Brace?"

"And such big feet as she had! Why, George, she was the laughing-stock of the town."

"Not much she wasn't! She was a young lady who would have made a model wife."

"Then why didn't you marry her and all her moles and warts and mushroom eyes?"

"Don't talk that way to me! Her eyes were as nice as yours!"

"They wan't."

"They was! I believe you are sorry because you didn't marry Brace!"

"And I know you are sorry because you didn't marry that beautiful and accomplished Miss Perkins!"

"I am, eh? I thought you said I had been a good husband to you?"

"And didn't you call me your blessed little wife?"

Then he plumped down and began to read the mortgage sales and advertisements in the paper, and she picked up her sewing and gave the cat a gentle kick. These old things will come up now and then, and somehow neither side ever gets entirely over them.

"How is this for cheek?" inquired J. B. Davis, one of Barnum's representatives, Girard House, Philadelphia, to a reporter, as he grabbed a handful of the skin on the left side of John Hoffmier's face and pulled it out five or six inches, like so much India-rubber. The reporter was struck dumb by Mr. Davis' cheeky behavior, but he was still more astonished to see Hoffmier smile as though he enjoyed the maltreatment. Then Mr. Davis explained that Hoffmier is the wonderful "India-rubber man" who has puzzled German and French savants for several years. Although the rara avis with the elastic cuticle does not speak or understand English, he smiled approvingly when Mr. Davis ceased speaking, and then, as if to sustain his reputation, pulled a handful of skin on the back part of his head around to his mouth and bit it, covered his entire face with the folds of skin which he drew up from his throat and neck, and pulled the skin on his arms and legs thirteen inches away from the flesh. The most remarkable thing is that as soon as the skin is released it instantly contracts to its original place, and as far as appearance is concerned does not differ from the epidermis of any healthy white person. The skin is very fair and its texture is remarkably fine—so fine, indeed, that it feels more like an infant's than an adult's.

"MOTHER," remarked a Duluth girl, "I think Harry must be going to propose to me." "Why, so, my daughter?" queried the old lady, laying down her spectacles, while her face beamed like a moon in its fourteenth night. "Well, he asked me this evening if I wasn't tired living with such a menagerie as you and dad."

AN autograph letter of George Washington's, taking strong ground against slavery in this country, and expressing a fervent hope that it would soon be blotted out, is said to have been found among the papers of the late E. W. Stoughton. With it were other original and unpublished letters of Washington.

A YOUTHFUL Pennsylvania Granger, about to be chastised by his father, called upon his grandfather to protect him from the middle man.

"Now, THEN, what's your papa's name, Freddy?" "Dunno." "Don't know your papa's name! Why, what does you mamma call him?" "Brute!"

A YOUNG man living in Leadville shipped to his little brother in St. Louis a choice donkey of the diminutive species known as the Mexican burro. HOW THE "DIGGER" KEEPS WARM.

Over in the Big meadows, any day, a fine illustration of chilly comfort may be seen in the plan adopted by the Indians to catch fish and keep warm at the same time. Follow the river, and occasionally you come across a noble red man, muffled up in all the old coats and blankets he possesses, sitting in his canoe, which is loaded with firewood. Three or four feet of the center of the canoe is covered with sand to the depth of two or three inches, and on this he keeps a bright fire blazing, and, with his back to the flame, pursues his duties of taking in the speckled beauties. The smoke might prove troublesome to a white man, but the Digger is in no danger of having his complexion injured, and, as he paddles along from one good riffle to another, he looks as independent as a lord, and throws a glance of pity at the poor devil of a white man, who takes his chances from the snowy bank, and has to knuckle under in the fishing race at the rate of about five to one.—*Plumas (Cal.) Senator Hill's condition at last accounts was improving.

The poet, Henry W. Longfellow, died at Cambridge, Mass., on last Friday, 24th inst.

Seven murderers were swung into eternity on last Friday, in the United States.

A disastrous fire in Richmond on last Sunday, destroyed property to the value of $600,000. The railroad bridge across James river was entirely destroyed.

A severe tornado swept over Selma, Ala., on Sunday morning last and property was damaged to a considerable extent, several houses being unroofed.

The Montgomery Advertiser in publishing the game law in a late issue, seems to have forgotten that by an act of the last legislature this law was repealed so far as relates to the counties of Jefferson, Pike, Chilton, Clay and Clarke.

Judge Advocate, General Swaim, has made his report to the Secretary of War on the finding of the court-martial in the case of Sergeant Mason. He holds that sentence of court-martial is invalid by reason of certain irregularities and informalities in the proceedings of the court.

Sergeant Mason's Case.

Numerous petitions have been forwarded to President Arthur from various northern cities, asking for the pardon of Sergeant Mason, a would-be assassin of Guiteau. The petitioners have gone so far in some instances as to virtually ostracise all who have the moral courage to refuse to sign such petitions, and in an Indiana town, it was reported that a certain minister of the gospel who refused to sign a like petion, would be compelled to give up his church and seek another field in which to pursue his holy calling, from the mere enmity which his refusal excited.

Such petitions, it is to be hoped, will meet with no favor from President Arthur. It is evident that great injustice would be done in pardoning Mason, when, in heart, he is guilty of the same crime for which Guiteau is to suffer, though he may have been less successful in its committal. Gen. Hancock has sentenced Mason to dismissal from the army and eight years imprisonment in the penitentiary, but on account of the irregularities attendant upon a court-martial, Mason will probably have a new trial in a civil court. But upon what grounds he is to be pardoned by the President, or even have his punishment commuted to dismissal from the army only, as some of the petitions apply for, we cannot clearly foresee. It will, moreover, be not an easy matter to get President Arthur to have anything to do with the case, as his name has already been in rather a closer connection with the great assassination, than he would wish. Fiat justitia, ruat coelum.

Ah Sin and Sambo.

Senators Edmunds, Teller and Jones of Nevada, have lately made speeches that have caused their fellow Republicans of the North to open their eyes in amazement. These speeches were made in the Senate in favoring the passage of the anti-Chinese bill, which provides for the prohibition of Chinese immigration to this country. Senator Jones of Nevada, set out in a crusade against Sambo, and boldy declared that the negro was unfit to be a citizen or to exercise the right of suffrage. He was followed by Edmunds, who played upon the same string, and all for the purpose of keeping the poor Chinaman from coming to this country to make an honest living. The inimitable Bill Arp thus humorously alludes to the acrobatic feats of the Yankee mind: "It is curious how they go over from one extreme to another. More than a century ago they thought it was right to steal negroes from Africa, and so they stole 'em, and after awhile they found out the darkey didn't thrive in New England, and they then concluded it was a sin to own 'em, and so they sold 'em off to Virginia and down South, and then commenced to abuse the South for buying 'em. Like the fellow who took the temperance fever and sold off his whiskies to a less conscious neighbor and then joined the good templars, and went over and lectured the man he sold to for pursuing such an ungodly calling." The negro, however, is getting along very well with us now, and is a valuable addition to our laboring population. His unfitness for citizenship is nothing new to us, but it is well that a Republican Senator has had the courage to tell his party that "the whole negro business is a melancholy blunder." The following extract from a Washington letter to the Mobile Chronicle, explains Senator Jones' position more fully:

"Edmund's speech last Wednesday amazed everybody, and yet it was mild and insignificant when contrasted with the speech of Jones, of Nevada, the President's closest friend. Edmunds said the South was unfortunate. We of New England don't wan't the negroes with us. We pray God deliver us from negro immigration. Many offenses of the South should be condoned. It was hard for ex-masters to bend before ex-slaves. Californians revolt against the Chinese and the Indian is crushed out. In what is the negro better or worse than the Celestial or the red man?

But Jones went a bowshot beyond Edmunds, and declared that he, in the South, would do what the Southerners did. He would even resist negro domination by blows with the bayonet. The Senate was startled; and the more when the Senate and galleries remembered that Jones is Arthur's closest friend."

A Query.

Mr. Editor:—Why is it that our County Commissioners fail to give the tax-payers a semi-annual statement of receipts and disbursements, as the law demands? Neglect to publish the same in the columns of the county paper is a criminal offense according to the statutes of Alabama. I herewith quote the law for the benefit of these Solons: "Chapter 7. Offenses against public revenue, Sec. 4273. Failure of Commissioners' Court to publish semi-annual statements.—If any court of county commissioners shall fail to publish semi-annual exhibits of the receipts and expenditures of moneys for and on account of their respective counties as required by law, each member of such court shall be liable to indictment and fine, not exceeding one hundred dollars for each offense.

Can it be possible, Mr. Editor, that the Commissioner's Court is ignorant of such a law, or do the members intend to act independent of it?

Tax-Payer.

We cannot answer the query of "Tax-payer," because we are unable to account for such gross neglect of duty on the part of the Board of Commissioners, unless mere ignorance of the law may be the reason. It is not probable that each member would be willing to act independent of the law, though one or more members should be so willing. We mentioned the matter to members of the board some time ago, and have since learned that the county treasurer was notified to make out a report for publication. If the Commissioners wish to have the law before them, they can refer to section 150, Code of Alabama (1876), which provides that "it shall be the duty of the court of county commissioners to make semi-annual publications, on the first day of January and July of each year, showing the receipts and expenditures of money for the county, specifying particularly the sources from which received and the purposes for which expended."

Some of these days, when the treasurer gets his report made out and presented we will publish it for the benefit of the tax-payers.

Hope Ahead.

A committee of stockholders who waited upon the superintendent of a California mine to ask why in blazes the said mine hadn't panned out anything but assessments, were graciously received, invited to be seated, and the official explained:

"Gentlemen, you are aware of the fact that we had scarcely begun work when the mouth of our mine was blocked by a land slide. That put us back a month."

They nodded their remembrance.

"Then we had just got in shape to take out 4,000 tons of ore, worth $2,000 per ton, when the mine caved in. You recall it?"

They did.

"Once more we bent ourselves to the burden of reaping $500 for every $10 invested. When the mine was flooded by a subterranean river."

That was true also.

"Then we had just got the water out when we discovered that our mine was located on another man's claim. We had him shot to prevent trouble, and once more we were about to declare a dividend of 200 per cent, when the dead man's heirs put in an appearance. There were three of them. We chased one over the range, had another hung by the vigilance committee, and I am happy to inform you that I have four men out after the other, and am every hour expecting to hear that he has tumbled off a cliff. Gentlemen, there is hope ahead—golden hope. Please come up and drink with me; after which there will be another assessment of 10 per cent.!"

The minutes of the late Alabama Conference, held in Selma, show the following interesting statistics:

There are 143 preachers in the Conference. Included in these are 11 of the 4th, 7 of the 3rd, 3 of the 2nd, and 10 of the 1st year. Seven are supernumerary; twelve are superanuated. Three died during the conference year. There are 200 local preachers, 31,251 members, and 18 colored members in the conference, 1,250 infants and 1,142 adults were baptized during the year.

There are 460 Sunday Schools, 3,815 teachers, and 16,983 scholars.

There are 483 churches, worth $480,330—57 parsonages, worth $61,720, and other church property, valued at $153,979.

There was expended in building, repairing, etc., $30.197.30; paid to Presiding Elders, $10,330.50, and to Pastors in charge of churches $58,564.65.

An experienced farmer writing in the Jackson Clarion from Starkville, Mississippi, has some good words to say for Johnson grass. He asserts that it is not excelled in nutritive properties by any of our native grasses, and that it will yield a greater quantity and a better quality of hay than any other grass ever introduced into the South. Six tons per acre in one season is not an unusual yield. Johnson grass and Guinea grass, he says, are of the same general family, but the latter is much coaser and has never been considered so very valuable for hay.

Mrs. E. H. Smith has a music class, which is flourishing.

Miss Lizzie Langford visited relatives in Montgomery this week.

Mr. James Hughes and wife are visiting relatives at Mountain Creek.

Mr. J. O. Smith is on a business trip to Cincinnati, and Willie thinks it rather confining to stay in the store all the time, for he would like to give Miss Nettie a buggy ride now and then.

Rev. Mr. Montgomery and family of Clanton, visited friends in this place on last Saturday.

The choir organized at this place is well attended and progressing finely.

We suggest that the young men organize a debating society.

We presume that by this time every citizen of our county has consulted his interest and subscribed for the VIEW. XX.

Calera News.

Two families from Birmingham, two from Montevallo and one from Selma, have recently moved to Calera.

The handsome countenace of your fellow townsman, Rudolph Ehrman, was seen on our streets last Monday.

We noticed in an issue of your paper some time ago, you claimed for Clanton the best looking Railroad agent on the S. & N. Railroad. Now, Mr. Editor, this may be so, but it would be very difficult to make the young ladies of Calera think so, for our agent is a handsome man and a lady's man too. One thing I do know, you have no one in Clanton that can whistle equal to Henry W. Parker, of Calera.

[Mr. Parker, perhaps, has had greater practice in the art of whistling. He is "given the mitten" so often by certain of the Calera fair, that he is compelled to whistle to keep up his courage. Some of our Clanton beaux have "travelled the same road," however, and would be hard to beat in that line, though we acknowledge that our railroad agent never whistles that kind of tune.—VIEW.]

Jim Smily, colored, of Jemison, was brought to Calera, last Sunday, under arrest, for obtaining money under a fraudulent pretence; but it appearing that there had been a misunderstanding, Jim was released on paying costs.

After the recent election on Prohibition, the colored churches in this precinct had all their members who had voted the "wet ticket" tried and turned out of the church. Not long afterwards two were caught robbing a car of meat. This not being so grave an offence was never heard of in the church.

As this is my first communication to the View, and as many of your readers know but little of Calera, it may not be amiss to tell them something about the town. There are seven dealers in dry goods, two dealers in beer and family groceries, two hotels and another large one being constructed, two lime kilns in the place and three more within four miles all having Calera for head quarters, one saw mill with barrel machinery and another being erected, three cooper shops, one drug store, one cigar and tobacco stand, a millinery store, barber shop, etc. Twelve houses have been completed in the past three months and eight more now in course of erection. The lime kilns employ about one hundred and seventy-five men. The railroads, telegraph and express companies employ about fifty and thirty-five more are engaged in building houses. More anon. RUFUS.

Mongolian Threats.

A gentleman in intimate relations with the embassy of the Chinese Empire at Washington said, to-day, that in case the pending anti-Chinese bill passed the House, the Chinese Minister would remove the Legation to Spain, to which country he is the accredited representative, and that official intercourse between the United States and China would be mutually broken off. Mr. Bartlett, the American secretary of the Legation, is said to be in hearty accord with the proposed action.

A member of the Chinese Legation who is a brother of the Emperor, said, when the pending bill recently passed the Senate, notwithstanding the treaty, that the policy of the United States Government, as denoted by the Senate's action, was not in keeping with the which should exist between nations. He further said that while he leaders in the Chinese Empire were aware that the crowded condition of the population was prolific of vice and poverty, and that notwithstanding these facts, wholesale emigration would seriously affect the autonomy of the empire, still they deprecate any unjust discrimination on the part of the United States, that virtually ostracises the native of China. He also said that, while not desirous of being regarded as making threats, he had no doubt the present commercial advantages which the United States reaps in her China trade would be directed into other channals, and that manifestoes would be issued by the Imperial Government would preclude American citizens from securing any beneficial results from commercial intercourse with China and this, as is intimated by parties connected with the Chinese Legation, might lead to most serious international complications, some what similar to the controversy years ago between England and Japan.

A writer in the Louisville Courier Journal gives some of the current superstitions of Kentucky negroes. If a person passes through a funeral procession he will die before the oldest one in it. If a dog lies on its back and howls it presages an early death in the family. If the longest snake killed in a day's search be suspended from the tree nearest to a parched field it will bring rain. If it be necessary to turn back after starting on an errand, the consequent bad luck may be averted by making a cross in the path with the left fore-finger. A stutterer may be cured by creeping up behind him unawares and knocking him down with a raw beef tongue just taken from the beast by an unmarried butcher under 21. A bloody knife, a bottle of alcohol, and a bag of live lizards are an effective outfit for bewitching an enemy; but the intended victim is often warned of the danger by an owl's screech close to his cabin. The recipient of a poisinous snake's bite drinks a pint of whiskey, and then, if sober enough, kills the first black chicken with white tail feathers he can find, picks the feathers out, and burns them.

A Baptist Classification of the Heathen.

At the Baptist ministers' meeting yesterday the Rev. Dr. R. S. MacArthur of the calvary Baptist Church, in Twenty-third street, spoke on the subject of "Aggressive Christian Work." He said immigrants from all lands were flocking to our shores. America opened her arms to the semi-heathen Irishman, the semi-heathen Italian, the heathen Chinaman, and the infidel German. If we did not Christianize them they would certainly heathenize us. We should receive the Chinaman with a welcome in one hand and a Christian Bible in the other.—N. Y. Sun.

TWO GOOD PAPERS FOR PRICE OF ONE.

As the coming political campaign in this State promises to be unusually interesting, the people at large should be fully posted in all matters of general and local importance.

We have made arrangements by which the Montgomery WEEKLY ADVERTISER and THE CHILTON VIEW will be furnished subscribers for $2.60 per year. This is certainly cheap enough to bring the two papers in the reach of all who desire to know what is going on in the State and country at large. The price for both papers is little more than was charged for one a few years ago.

Rev. T. F. Thomasson writing to Rev. T. M. Baily, Cor. Secretary State Mission Board, says of Jemison and Clanton Baptist Churches:

"At Jemison we have a regularly organized church, but it is neither strong nor prosperous. There are only about a dozen members, and only two of these are male members. Besides they are all poor and able to do but little toward sustaining a preacher. Heretofore they have had no regular preaching for several years. However, there is plenty of material here, and with God's help we hope to do a good work while with them.

The Baptist outlook at Clanton is more encouraging than it has been for years. The ladies of this church deserve a great deal of credit for the noble work they have done and are doing in behalf of the Baptist cause at Clanton. At this place also we have a regularly organized church. They have a house of worship of their own, and when it is finished it will be a very nice little church. This we are endeavoring to do, and I think we shall succeed before very long."

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
AND SPERMATORRHŒA.

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

A SOCIAL NUISANCE.

The [illegible] the American society whose breast quivers and tingles with delight at the idea of friendly notice upon its travels from the Prince of Wales, and which at home grovels in its own way before any titled Tom Noddy, is a social pest. Its influence is degrading and demoralizing. But it has a ridiculous aspect which is wanting in its prototype. Lady Clara Vere de Vere may be selfish and cruel and a wholly useless and encumbering person in the world. But she is the daughter of a hundred Earls, and she shows it as certainly as a high-bred racer shows his Arabian descent. A certain nameless refinement and elegance and grace may distinguish her—for it is not, of course, always so—as Lovelace, although a scoundrel, may have the urbane and gentle courtesy of the chevalier without fear and without reproach.

Oh, your soft eyes, your low replies!
A great enchantress you may be.

With all her stony-heartedness and selfish vanity and inhuman pride, the Lady Clara Vere de Vere is still a swan among inferior birds. But no mushroom wealth, no buying of the crown jewels of France as shirt-studs, no improvised magnificence and astounding luxury and extravagance, can rival this effect. The tone that time alone, lapsing through long centuries, gives the picture, the tone which is its secret splendor and charm and worth—how will you supply that in a morning? The son and daughter or the grandson and granddaughter of the haberdasher and the coal-heaver and the fat-boiler may outbid Emperors for a vase and Queens for necklaces, but they can no more buy the poetic perspective and the association and historic setting which belong to the Emperor and Queen than they can buy the moon.

Moreover, it is a compensation of justice that those in whom the refinement of long training is most conspicuous disdain the shoddy splendor of sudden wealth. The amazing extravagance of luxury in some instances in America is as little representative of distinctive American character and quality as an English rake of a noble family who comes to hunt up a rich American wife is a type of that trained intelligence and public spirit and service which mark an Englishman like Lord Granville in Parliament or the late Dean Stanley in the church.—"Editor's Easy-Chair," in Harper's Magazine.

A LIVELY CRITICISM.

The following musical criticism from an Aurora (Ill.) paper is full of strong contemporaneous human interest:

"The Kellogg concert, as might have been anticipated, was largely attended. The dollar freeze-out was rather rough on the hoodlums, but the audience managed to exist without the customary war-whoops. The divine Louise was as resonant as usual, which, by the way, she ought to be, being well-seasoned. The editor of this paper makes no great pretensions in the way of musical criticism, but when a genuine $600 grand spiral subband twist, back-action, self-adjusting, chronometer-balanced, full-jeweled, fourth-proof, rip-snorting conglomeration comes to town he proposes to hump himself. Kellogg's diaphragm has evidently not, like wine, improved with old age. Her upper register is up-stairs near the skylight, while the lower register is closed for repairs. The aforesaid Kellogg performed her grand triple act of singing, rolling the eyes and talking to some one in the wings at the same time. Her smiles at the audience were calm, but determined, but her smiles at the "feller" hid behind the scenes were divine. Her singing, when she condescended to pay any attention to the audience, to our critical ear (the other ear being carefully folded up), seemed to be a blending of the fortissimo crescendo dam-fi-no—or care either. Her costume was a harmonious blending of the circus-tent and balloon style, and was very gorgeous, barring a tendency to spill some of the contents out at the top. The Italian part of the business was as fidgety and furious as usual, and demonstrated what early associations with the hand-organ and monkey will accomplish. The venerable and obese freak of nature, Brignoli, was as graceful as usual. His appearance very nearly resembles a stove in a corner grocery, or a water tank on a narrow-gauge railroad. He was no fully appreciated until he turned to go off the stage. He then appeared to his best advantage, and to take an interest in getting out of sight as soon as possible, an effort in which he had the hearty sympathy of the audience."

Five hundred locomotives were built in the three Paterson establishments during the past year, worth upward of $5,000,000. The prices ranged from $6,000 to $14,000 according to size and character. This is the largest number ever turned out in Paterson in any one year. The business was conducted entirely on a cash basis. The prices obtained were very much lower than in former years, and the profits correspondingly less, but the losses were also much below the average, in consequence of the cash policy pursued. Fully 600 locomotives will be completed in the same city this year. Exchange.

AN UNUSUAL FURORE.

A Recent Excitement Investigated by the Herald and the Results Made Public.

[Cleveland (O.) Herald.]

A few weeks ago we copied into our columns from the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Chronicle "A Remarkable Statement," made by J. B. Henion, M. D., a gentleman who is well known in this city. In that article Dr. Henion recounted a wonderful experience which befell him, and a few days thereafter we published from the same paper a second article, giving an account of the "Excitement in Rochester," caused by Dr. Henion's statement. In the first article Dr. Henion stated that for a number of years, up to last June, he had been afflicted with what seemed at first a most mysterious trouble. He felt unaccountably tired at frequent intervals; he had dull and indefinite pains in various parts of his body and head, and was very hungry one day and entirely without appetite the next. However, as a physician he thought, and so did his fellow physicians, that he was suffering from malaria.

But yet he grew worse, and was finally obliged to give up a large and lucrative practice. Still he was not conscious of his danger, nor that a monstrous disease was becoming fixed upon him, although all his organs had become gradually weakened. The symptoms above described continued, accompanied by others of an aggravated nature, and he noticed a peculiar color and odor about the fluids he was passing; that they were abundant one day and very scanty the next, and were covered with froth, or filled with brickdust sediment. But even then he did not realize his real and alarming condition. At last, however, he was brought face to face with the fact that he was a victim of a most terrible disease, and he made heroic efforts for recovery. He traveled extensively and consulted the best physicians, but they could give him only temporary relief, and that principally in the form of morphine. And so he grew steadily and constantly worse until his life became a torture. His pulse was uncontrollable. He lived wholly by injections, and for six days and nights he had the hiccoughs constantly, which are considered the sure indications of coming death.

When hope and life were nearly exhausted, his pastor, the Rev. Dr. Foote, rector of St. Paul's Church, strongly urged him to try a means which the reverend gentleman had seen used with remarkable results. He objected at first, but finally consented, and was conscious of an improved condition the first week. His pains gradually disappeared; his stomach resumed digestion; his heart became regular; his headaches disappeared; he had no more chills and fever, or acidity of the stomach; he gained twenty-six pounds in three months, and is a well man to-day, being entirely cured of a most pronounced case of Bright's disease.

Although conscious of the consequences from his professional brethren, still as a duty to his fellow men, and according to a vow he made on what he thought was his dying bed, he published a card detailing his illness and remarkable cure. "Since my recovery," he says, "I have thoroughly reinvestigated the subject of kidney difficulties and Bright's disease, and I believe MORE THAN ONE-HALF THE DEATHS WHICH OCCUR IN AMERICA ARE CAUSED BY BRIGHT'S DISEASE OF THE KIDNEYS. It has no distinctive symptoms of its own (indeed, it often develops without any pain whatever in the kidneys or their vicinity,) but has the symptoms of nearly every other known complaint. Hundreds of people die daily whose burials are authorized by a physician's certificate of "Heart Disease," "Apoplexy," "Paralysis," "Spinal Complaint," "Rheumatism," "Pneumonia," and other common complaints, when in reality it was Bright's disease of the kidneys. Few physicians, and fewer people, realize the extent of this disease or its dangerous and insidious nature. It steals into the system like a thief, manifests its presence by the commonest symptoms, and fastens itself upon the life before the victim is aware. It is nearly as hereditary as consumption, quite as common and fully as fatal. Entire families inheriting it from their ancestors have died, and yet none of the number knew or realized the mysterious power which was removing them. Instead of common symptoms, it often shows none whatever, but brings death suddenly, and as such is usually supposed to be heart disease."

The second article entitled "Excitement in Rochester," was made up of interviews with Dr. Henion himself, who confirmed all said in his card, and also with Mr. H. H. Warner. The latter gentleman did not regard Dr. Henion's case as particularly exceptional, because he had known of very many such cures by the same means in all parts of the land. Kidney diseases, he said, are carrying off tens of thousands every year, while Bright's disease is increasing 250 per cent. a decade, and yet the people do not realize it or seek to check it until too late. He related how a New Orleans medical professor, lecturing on this disease, thinking to show his class what healthy fluids were, subjected some of his own to a chemical test, and although he had no suspicion of it before, discovered that he, too, had the dreaded disease which proved fatal in less than a year. There was also an interview with the celebrated chemist of the New York State Board of Health, Dr. S. A. Lattimore, who said he had analyzed the remedy which cured Dr. Henion, and found that it was "entirely free from any poisonous or deleterious substances."

We have made these condensations in order that all the material facts may be set before our readers. Since the publication of these two articles, having been besieged with letters of inquiry, we sent a communication to Dr. Henion and also one to H. H. Warner & Co., asking if any additional proof could be given us as to the validity of the statements published. In answer thereto we have received the following letters, which add interest to the entire subject and wholly verify every statement hitherto made:

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Feb. 2, 1882.

GENTLEMEN: Your favor is received. The published statement, over my signature, to which you refer is true in every respect, and I owe my life and present health wholly to the power of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. It is not surprising that people should question the statement I made, for my recovery was as great a marvel to myself, as to my physicians, and friends.

J. B. HENION, M. D.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Jan. 31, 1882.

SIRS: Acknowledging your favor duly received, we would say: The best proof we can give you that the statements made by Dr. Henion are entirely true, and would not have been published unless strictly so, is the following testimonial from the best citizens of Rochester, and a card published by Rev. Dr. Foote, which you are at liberty to use if you wish.

H. H. WARNER & CO.

To Whom it may Concern:

In the Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat and Chronicle of December 31, 1881, there appeared a statement in the form of a card from Dr. J. B. Henion, of this city, recounting his remarkable recovery from Bright's disease of the kidneys, after several doctors of prominence had given him up, by the use of a preparation manufactured in this city and known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure.

We are personally or by reputation acquainted with Dr. Henion, and we believe he would publish no statement not literally true. We are also personally or by reputation well acquainted with H. H. Warner & Co., proprietors of the remedy, whose commercial and personal standing in this community is of the highest order, and we believe that they would not publish any statements which were not literally and strictly true in every particular.

To the Editor of the Living Church, Chicago, Ill.:

Will you allow the following card, personal to myself, to appear in your widely circulated paper?

There was published in the Rochester Democrat and Chronicle of the 31st of Dec. last, a statement made by J. B. Henion, M. D., narrating how he had been cured of Bright's disease of the kidneys, almost in its last stages, by the use of Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. I was referred to in that statement as having recommended and urged Dr. Henion to try the remedy, which he did, and was cured.

Now the republishing of his statement in many of the leading journals of the day has been the cause of an incessant flow of letters to me making many inquiries, but chiefly whether the statement is true, or a mere advertising dodge, etc. etc.

I beg, therefore to anticipate any further inquiries and save time and labor, and some postage, by saying that the statement of Dr. Henion is true, so far as it concerns myself, and I believe it to be true in all other respects. He is a parishioner of mine and I visited him in his sickness. I urged him to take the medicine, and would do the same again to any one who was troubled with a disease of the kidneys and liver.

Judge Blatchford's Decision in the McAlpin Shield Plug Tobacco Case.

An important decision, widely affecting the interests of the tobacco trade throughout the country, was rendered recently by Judge Blatchford in the United States Circuit Court. In the suit of P. Lorillard & Co. against D. H. McAlpin & Co., manufacturers of the famous "Shield Plug Tobacco," claimed to be an infringement of the "Beddoe Tin Tag Patent," His Honor refused to grant an injunction, assigning as his reasons therefor that McAlpin's Tin Shield does not infringe the patent. The case was regarded as a test suit, being vigorously contested on both sides, and watched with interest by the whole trade. Gifford & Gifford appeared for Lorillard; Samuel A. Duncan and B. F. Thurston for McAlpin.

AMERICAN HORSE-SHOES IN ENGLAND.

The poetical surroundings of "the village blacksmith" and his harmonious anvil, says Chambers' Journal, are threatened with a powerful rival, by the introduction from the United States of a new industry; namely, the manufacture of machine-made horse-shoes. A company whose premises face the Thames opposite Greenwich has opened its works to supply the United Kingdom with these machine-made articles. The iron is rolled from scrap, coming from the rollers as a grooved bar, which is afterward cut into lengths, punched with the necessary holes, and finally is bent by the machine into the horse-shoe shape. It is calculated that there are in the United Kingdom about 3,000,000 horses; in Europe generally more than 30,000,000; requiring annually 1,500,000 tons of shoes. So that, if the new company turns out good work, there are plenty of customers for its goods. It is said that the new shoe has met with the approval of some eminent authorities, and is already used by several tramway companies.

A Visit to the Temple of Music and Beer.

Among Chicago's many resorts there are but few that are better patronized than the "Rath-Keller" of Mr. L. P. Hansen, of Nos. 99 and 101 Madison street, and Nos. 130 and 132 Dearborn street, a visit to this abode of pleasure being always in order. Here the connoisseur in liquors finds his choice beverage, whatever it may be; and as for imported beers—they are to be had without end. We have termed it a temple of music, and not without an excellent reason therefor, as a visit to the establishment any night from 11 o'clock until 1 will fully justify, for Mr. Hansen has introduced a new feature into his business; it is this: At the conclusion of the night's performances in our various theatres the orchestral performers thereof, by a standing invitation from Mr. Hansen, assemble nightly for a grand supper, and surely at this hour he is in search of a "feast of reason and a flow of soul," or a good solid feast and a flowing bowl, will find it in Der Raths-Keller. When the viands have been cleared away and good cheer prevails, the musical instruments are brought into use, and then, then, indeed, there is music.

Our reporter lately visited the establishment, by invitation of Mr. Hansen, and was so delighted as to exclaim:

"Mr. Hansen, I should imagine that the presiding genius over this nightly assembly would never know of anything but pleasant hours. Who would think of sickness or sorrow here, where all is gayety?"

"Well," replied Mr. Hansen, "the presiding genius, as you say, has not much trouble from sickness or sorrow, I am proud to say; the most serious experience he ever had in that line being about a year ago, when he suffered from rheumatism. I can assure you, though, that I did have all the experience in that way that I cared to have. I suffered the most intense pain imaginable. It was horrid! Night and day it kept me on the rack. I was totally unable to attend to my business, or to do anything in fact. An old musician, who had for years acted as orchestra leader throughout the country—Herr Meyers—I suppose you have heard of him—told me to use St. Jacobs Oil. I did so, and from the very first moment I found relief. I persevered in the use of the Oil for about three or four weeks, and at the end of that time I found myself permanently cured.

"My wife was next attacked with the rheumatism, and, as in my case, St. Jacobs Oil was brought into requisition, and with a like result, the Oil curing her in a very short time.

"Another remarkable case was that of my personal freiend, Mr. W. S. Gaunnon, book-keeper for the house of P. O'Neill, the State street wine merchant, a house established in 1851. That gentleman (Mr. G.) suffered a great deal from the rheumatism until he tried St. Jacobs Oil, but that wonder working medicine put a stop to his misery, and cured him in a very little while. He says that there is nothing to equal the Great German Remedy for the cure of that dread disease—rheumatism.

"Another noteworthy instance is that of a well known business man, probably one of the best known men in Chicago; a gentleman whose indorsement should carry weight in any matter is C. C. Crapp, manager of Gossett's carpet and dry goods house, one of the most extensive establishments of that kind in the city. Mr. Crapp was for a long time a sufferer from rheumatism, and was cured by St. Jacobs Oil—the never-failing cure. He is actually enamored of the Oil, and says that there is nothing equal to it in the world. He says that he tried many different remedies, but found them entirely useless, until he tried St. Jacobs Oil. The cure came with the Oil, and now Mr. Crapp is continually praising that remarkable remedy."

An Open Letter.

MESSRS. HARRIS & CO.—It affords me great pleasure to make the following statement: For FOURTEEN YEARS I have been constantly suffering from chronic hæmaturia—the hemorrhage being at times very great, and at no time entirely arrested. The accompanying congestion of the kidneys frequently was acutely painful. I have had treatment by the best physicians, but their skill gave me no relief. The wide-spread celebrity of the Bailey Springs, in the cure of affections of the urinary organs, determined me to try them. I have been here two weeks and am entirely relieved, indeed, in less than one week, all appearance or sensation of disease had disappeared, as if by magic. I leave for home to-day, and make this voluntary statement, believing that too much cannot be said in regard to the wonderful effects of the waters here. Very truly yours,

N. W. WARD,
July 10th, 1879. of Senatobia, Miss.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: "In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleedings of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as half a dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. I write this hoping every one afflicted with diseased lungs will take DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I can positively say it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness."

MOTHER'S BOYS.

Yes, I know there are stains on my carpet,
The traces of small, muddy boots;
And I see your fair tapestry glowing,
And spotless with flowers and fruits.

And I know that my walls are disfigured
With prints of small fingers and hands;
And that your own household most truly
In immaculate purity stands.

And I know that my parlor is littered
With many old treasures and toys,
While your own is in daintiest order,
Unharmed by the presence of boys.

And I know that my room is invaded
Quite boldly all hours of the day;
While you sit in yours unmolested
And dream the soft quiet away.

Yes, I know there are four little bedsides
Where I must stand watchful each night,
While you go out in your carriage,
And flash in your dresses so bright.

Now, I think I'm a neat little woman;
And I like my house orderly, too;
And I'm fond of all dainty belongings,
Yet would not change places with you.

No! keep your fair home with its order,
Its freedom from bother and noise;
And keep your own fanciful leisure,
But give me my four splendid boys.

THE ECCENTRIC BACHELOR.

F—— was a living specimen of the typical old bachelor, a personage more often met with in the pages of fiction than in real life; lean and sharp visaged of aspect, crusty and cynical of temper. He was, moreover, an avowed oddity; one of the privileged class who, by virtue of this reputation, can do what others dare not without exciting surprise or giving offense; whose eccentricities are met with a shrug of the shoulder and the remark, "What else can you expect of an oddity like me?"

He was an unpopular man, receiving scant sympathy; yet capable, nevertheless, of kind and generous acts, performed on the condition that they were to be kept strictly secret and that he was never to be thanked for them. Woe betide the recipient of a favor to whom it was brought home that he had mentioned the same to any one, or extolled the kindness of his benefactor! The unlucky wight once detected in thus giving vent to his gratitude had taken the surest method of cutting himself off from further help. He never got another chance.

Our old bachelor enjoying, as we have said, the privileges of eccentricity, it excited no surprise when, on one occasion, after an absence from home, he wrote to inform his servants—an old couple who had lived with him for years—that he would be accompanied by a widow lady, who was likely to make a long stay in his house, and for whom apartments were to be got ready.

"And a pretty upset she'll make!" exclaimed the dismayed old housekeeper. "A fussy, middle-aged party, no doubt, ordering and interfering and wanting to have everything her own way; which she won't get, John, as long as you and I can prevent her. She'll be a clever madam if she gets her foot inside of my store-room while there's locks and bolts to keep her out, I can tell her!"

"Don't you make so sure," said John. The old man could not resist now and then teasing his helpmate as a little set-off against sundry naggings on the part of that good old lady. "Maybe it's a mistress of the house and of yourself that's coming to it. Them widders are great at wheedling. It's time, if the master is ever to marry, that—"

"Ah, stop your croaking now!" cried Mrs. John. This dire suggestion was too overpowering for her feelings.

The appointed day arrived, and when the cab drove to the door, the two old domestics, with very sour faces and their backs very much up, went to receive their master and his unwelcome guest. Their first glimpse of the latter showed them that they might have spared their fears and hostile intentions. Out from the cab, before their astonished eyes, sprang a girlish figure, whose bright, happy face contrasted curiously with her mourning garments.

"Mind the step, uncle!" ("Oh, his niece, she is!") she cried, tripping up to the hall door. "Don't trouble, please," with a smile to the old housekeeper; "that bag is too heavy for you to take; I'll carry it."

And when the stranger came down to breakfast next morning with a morsel of a cap perched on the top of her golden braids of hair ("not my idea of a widow's cap," said the dame to her husband; "and would you believe it, John, singing away like a bird while she was dressing!") she looked absurdly young; more like a girl in her teens than an experienced, "settled" matron.

The advent of his pretty niece made some change in the habits of the old gentleman. He had friends at dinner more frequently than of yore; and, in addition to the elderly fogies that formed his usual society, younger guests were invited, suited to the years of his visitor. With great amusement her uncle observed the attraction her comeliness and winning ways were for these. "Swarming round—like flies about a honey-pot! Scenting, I dare say, a fat jointure. All widows are supposed to be rich, and just because she is a widow, and for no other reason, making up to her, the fools!" This to himself with a cynical chuckle. Aloud: "Nice little woman, sir, that niece of mine. Plenty of good looks, but hasn't a sixpence—not a sixpence to bless herself with."

It was wonderful how the old house was brightened up by the presence of its blithe young inmate. But by no one was its pleasant influence more felt than by the domestics, who had vowed such hostility before her arrival. The old woman especially was devoted to her; loving her for her own sake as well as for the kindly help and good offices she was always receiving from the deft and willing hands of the young girl. In the store-room—that sacred retreat which her foot was never to invade—the latter was to be found on "company days" busy and happy as a bee; with sleeves tucked half way up her plump arms, her heavy crape skirts stowed away under one of the old lady's capacious holland aprons, and lappets pinned high over her head, while, laughing merrily at the queer figure she made of herself, she worked away at the cakes and sweets, taking a world of trouble off the poor housekeeper's hands.

"And so thoughtful she is, and gay; bless her," his wife would tell old John. "She'll come tripping up to me, and 'Now, do as you're bid,' she'll say playfully, forcing me down into my big chair. 'Sit down and rest, there's an old dear, and take your tea. I'm not going to let you do a turn more.' And then she'll work away, her tongue going all the time as fast as her fingers: running on about her mother and her home, her flowers and pets, dogs and birds, and what not, but never a word about husband or married days. And if I touch upon them, or ask a question, she'll get quite silent and strange-like in a minute, and turn off the subject as if it burned her. Perhaps for all she's so merry on the outside she's fretting for him that's gone, and can't a-bear to talk of him."

"Nothing of the sort!" cried old John. "Don't you go to think such stuff. She'd take a husband to-morrow; mark my words. And it's my opinion there's a young gentleman comes to this house that has a fairish chance. He's desperate sweet upon her. I haven't eyes in my head for nothing, and I see plain she doesn't dislike him, or hold herself up distant from him, as she does from others."

Old John was right. Matters were in due time so satisfactorily settled between the young couple that an appeal to the uncle was deemed expedient. The old gentleman received the announcement with a half-pleased, half-satirical grimace.

"Ha, I thought so!" he muttered. "But are you aware, my friend, that there is no money in the case? The lady hasn't a sixpence, and—"

"I know it," indignantly interrupted the suitor. "You have made that remark before. I want no fortune with my wife, my own being my love—"

"Oh, spare your rapture, young sir. Not so fast! Don't be too sure of the prize; for when you hear what I have to tell you there may be perhaps a change in your views. I have no time to go into the matter now; come to-morrow and hear what will surprise you;" and the old gentleman went off, nodding back—malevolently the lover fancied—over his shoulder, and leaving the poor fellow in a state of most uncomfortable suspense and uncertainty.

What could this dark hint mean? and why was he not to make sure? Could it be possible there was any doubt, any mystery as to the demise of the beloved one's husband? He could not help calling to mind her confused and singular manner at times; a certain want of frankness; an evident embarrassment at any allusion to the past. The possibility of an obstacle made the young man realise, as he had not before done, how deeply his affections were engaged. He spent a miserable night, awaiting in vain conjectures and sleepless anxiety the tidings which the morrow might bring forth.

In order to explain matters it will be necessary to go back for some months previous to the arrival of the young lady at her uncle's house, as well as to change the scene from it to a country cottage in a remote part of England—the home of the widowed sister of the eccentric bachelor. In it we find him pacing up and down the small drawing room and listening to the querulous complaints that its occupant, a confirmed invalid, is uttering from the sofa on which she lies. "I think but little of my bodily sufferings," she is saying; "they cannot now last long. Every day I feel more plainly that the end is not far off, and my doctor tells me the same. The distress of mind that torments me is what is so hard to bear."

"And what may this be about, if I might ask?"

"The future of my child when I am gone. All I have, as you know, dies with me. She will be penniless, and the thought of what is to become of her, cast on the world without a home, haunts me night and day. It is too dreadful!"

"A girl—and young—and not bad-looking. Where's the fear? Somebody 'll marry her. Men are such fools!"

The sick woman could not forbear a smile.

"Ah, but there are no men, no fools here! In this remote corner we see no one, and the poor child, taken up with nursing me and tied to a sick-room, has made no acquaintances. It is killing me to see her young life sacrificed and to think of the future."

The mother's tears began to flow. Her hearer, never very amiably inclined toward the weaker sex, or at ease in its company, increased his quarter-deck pacings in much discomfiture as these symptoms of "water-works turned on" became apparent. His hurried steps soon subsided, however, to a steady march up and down the little drawing-room, while, with frowning brow and occasional chuckles, he seemed to be concocting some scheme. After a few minutes he came to a sudden halt before the invalid's sofa.

"Can the girl act?" he asked abruptly.

"Act? How do you mean? I—"

"Oh, you needn't look frightened, I'm not going to propose sending her to the Gaiety or the Criterion."

"Well, except in the little make-believe plays and dressings-up that children delight in—all children are, I think, actors born." ("Ay, and men and women too," growled the cynic)—"except that sort of thing she has never seen or had any opportunity of acting. Why do you ask?"

And in reply her brother unfolded the plan he had been concocting—namely, that his niece, laying aside her "frippery and her trinkets and other girl's nonsense," was to put on the mourning garb and act the part of a widow, in which assumed character she was to come to stay with him in his London home.

"But I don't understand"—

"And you're not wanted to understand," he snarled. "It's my whim; and it may be for the girl's advantage, If she's willing, and can hold her tongue, I'll come back for her when she's ready. And I'll pay for her outfit. Crape and weepers! Ho, ho, ho!"

When her first surprise at her uncle's strange proposition was over, the young girl jumped eagerly at the prospect of a change from the dull home she never yet had left. She was young and spirited; at an age when love of variety and a longing to see the world and plunge into its unknown delights are natural. The playing the widow she thought would be excellent fun. There was a spice of adventure in it, and it would be like the private theatricals and acting charades she had read of and imagined so pleasant. The old gentleman's reason for wishing her to do so was a puzzle; but then who could wonder at anything he did? absurd oddity that he was! Perhaps it was to avoid having to provide a chaperon for her; he hated ladies so, and elderly ones especially.

The result of the scheme we have seen; and the scheme itself was what its originator proceeded to divulge to the would-be husband when that individual presented himself with considerable misgiving and agitation on the appointed morning.

"As the lady has not turned out to be what you took her for, is not, in fact, a widow, perhaps the whole matter may be off. A disappointment, no doubt," wound up the uncle with one of his grim chuckles; "but 'twas only right to tell you in time. Young man, if you can pardon the deceit, take her."

"Well," exclaimed the young man to his fiancee, when all things were cleared up and satisfactorily arranged, and the engaged pair were talking over the queer circumstance that brought them together. "I always knew your uncle was eccentric, but this surpasses anything I could have imagined of him."

HOW HE EARNED HIS PROMOTION

The chief clerk of a French merchant received an invitation to a masked ball at his employer's, and was the envy of his comrades. It was considered a mark of very great favor, and was looked upon, as a sign that he would soon be offered a place in the firm itself. Resolved to do all he could to make the occasion a success, he spent a good deal of time and considerable money in devising and making his masquerade costume, which, after long deliberation, he resolved should be that of a monkey. Then he spent a week learning a number of tricks—grinning, clambering on the chimney, springing over the bed, balancing himself on the back of a chair. The evening came. He rang the bell, hung his overcoat into the servant's arms, and, with a grin and chatter, turned a somersault under the chandelier. The gentlemen stood stupefied, the ladies screamed. His mask prevented him from seeing much, but the noise encouraged him to bound over a sofa and throw down a cabinet of old china. At this moment a hand seized him, tore off his mask, and the voice of his employer asked him what he meant by his infernal conduct. Before he could explain he was hustled out of the house, learning by one glimpse that the rest of the company were in evening dress. The next day he was sent for, and entered the office with trembling knees. "I had the pleasure of a visit from you last evening," said the gentleman. "Yes, sir—that is—I—" "No excuses," said the other, "no excuses—I have raised your salary. I noticed you were overlooked for promotion last year. Good morning; shut the door after you." "Well, I'll be ——," said the clerk, going out. His employer had made an early investigation into the matter, and found that the other clerks had "put up a job" on the young man by sending him a bogus invitation. His employer made things even by promoting him over their heads.

Of the 441,043 immigrants who landed at Castle Garden last year 152,491 gave New York as their destination. Of course a large part of this invading army will encamp elsewhere as soon as friends there or in other parts of the country find a place and employment for them in less crowded localities. But the fraction left over will appreciably swell the ranks of the beggars, rag-pickers, organ-grinders, low criminals and other objectionable classes. Eleven thousand two hundred and seventy of the new-comers went to Massachusetts, 45,116 to Pennsylvania. The vastly more inviting State of Illinois received but 54,461. Michigan got, according to the announcements of intended destination, 20,300; Iowa, 16,475; Minnesota, 18,819; Wisconsin, 19,715; Missouri, 9,724; and Indiana, 6,131. To the wheat States and Territories—Dakota, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska and Wisconsin—there were bound 148,274, or more than one-third of the total arrivals at New York. South Carolina got but 704; Georgia, 828; Kentucky, 1,557; Louisiana, 1,039; North Carolina, 785; Mississippi, 572; the cotton States together but 4,854—an insignificant share.

The arrangements for the organization of a new line of fast steamers between this country and Europe have so far progressed that the scheme is now looked upon as a certainty. The new company propose to build at first three ships, sailing weekly, and to increase the number as business warrants. Vessels are promised which, in ordinarily good weather, will make 500 miles a day and accomplish the trip inside of six days. They will save 270 miles of water travel and all delays at the bar at Liverpool and New York, beside the delays of quarantine at the latter port. It is proposed to build these vessels somewhat after the model of the English torpedo-boat—500 feet in length and from fifty to fifty-two feet beam. As they are to carry only express freight, it is believed to be possible to construct them not only for greater speed but for greater safety than the ordinary steamship, and to so construct their water-tight compartments that it will be next to impossible to sink them. As there will be the same weight above as below the surface of the water, it is also believed that the steamers will not rock like ordinary ones. They will carry passengers and express freight only.

A man at the Executive Mansion who wanted to see the President wrote as follows on his card as an inducement to be let in: "My wife is a personal friend of one of your predecessors."

A ROMANCE IN TWO CHAPTERS.

Twelve years ago, after an American named Wallace had got his family and "traps" aboard an ocean steamer at Liverpool returning to this country, he suddenly remembered that he had forgotten to pay the nurse girl at the hotel. As there remained two hours before sailing, he set out for the hotel. On his way he got into an altercation with a man on the street, which ended by the American's knocking him down. In revenge he accused his assailant of trying to pick his pockets, and had him arrested. Wallace offered $1,000 for his release in order that he might take the steamer. The police didn't believe his story, and, having had a telegraphic order from the United States that morning to arrest a counterfeiter, they thought he would answer every purpose. He could not identify himself, the hotel keeper saying that he knew nothing about him except that he went away from the hotel without paying the nurse girl. He was therefore sentenced and imprisoned for two years. At the end of that time he learned the rope-maker's trade, and earned enough to come home as an emigrant. On reaching this side he could find or hear nothing of his wife. He set to work, however, and made a small fortune, which he subsequently increased to a large one by means of a mining speculation, that led him finally to Utah. At Salt Lake a friend, in answer to his needs, conducted him to a widow's home, who was famous for the excellence of the shirts she made. His friend introduced him as a gentleman who wanted some shirts made. The woman gave a scream. It was his wife, and the young girl in the room the baby he last saw in the steamship. Her husband, failing to return on the vessel, she concluded that he intended deserting her, and, having considerable money, she made her way West, lost her money in San Francisco gambling in stocks, and was supporting herself in Salt Lake by her needle.

THOMAS H. BENTON.

Thomas H. Benton was by far the most striking figure in the Senate. When he arose to speak, his form towered head and shoulders above everybody else. When excited or enraged, his large face, high cheek bones, heavy eye-lashes capping his large rolling eyes, and his leonine rage were terrific. His large head was covered with bushy hair, not always the most tidily arranged. His stentorian voice and blunt style of speaking gave him the air of a dictatorial, domineering character. In his old age he continued to work like a Titan. At 76 years of age he kept on revising his works and writing new ones; and on his death-bed, when he could no longer speak aloud, he dictated in faint whispers to his amanuensis. The death of his wife, four years before his own, so affected him that thereafter he was never known to go to any place of amusement or festivity. In life's evening he spent years in writing the great work of his life, "Thirty Years in the United States Senate." When it was nearly ready for the press, an accidental fire destroyed his manuscript. His great force of will led him to rewrite it. In feeble age he toiled on, and shortly before his death he finished the great and crowning work of his toilsome life. He was of robust health, like Cass, doubtless owing to his temperate habits. He used to say that, when a boy, he promised his mother that he would never indulge in the use of strong drink or tobacco, and that he had literally kept his promise through life.

HOW TO DISTINGUISH SMALL-POX

A New York surgeon says that "whenever you see pimples depressed in the center you may take that as a sign of small-pox. Small-pox pustules appear first on the face, then on the neck and hands, and afterward on the body. At first they are the size and have the solidity of small shot, but a layman would not be able to judge of them until on and after the fourth day, when they become depressed in the center and surrounded by a circle of pink that turns a dark crimson. These pimples are often so thick that they run together. There is an odor accompanying the disease that, once noticed, cannot be forgotten.

A Brooklyn girl of 13 died the other day from the effects of having her ears pierced. A few days before Christmas she was told that she was going to have a pair of ear-rings for a present, and, in order that she might wear them on the holiday, she immediately had her ears pierced by her brother-in-law. Unfortunately she caught cold, erysipelas set in, which was followed by convulsions, and after lingering about a week she died.

Two Negroes Hung at Selma for the Murder of a Helpless Old Man.

The Selma Times of the 1st inst., contains a full account of the hanging of Bill Ledlow and Al. Weisinger, the two negroes convicted of the murder of Mr. Jessie B. Weising, on the 19th of last December. The murderers went into his store and called for a bottle of whiskey, and while Mr. Weisinger was drawing it, they seized the opportunity of killing him and robbing the store. The murdered man was in his seventy-sixth year. Three negroes were arrested on suspicion of having committed the crime—Bill Ledlow, Al. Weisinger and Porter Ivy. The circumstantial evidence and the confession of Ivy, resulted in the finding of all three guilty. Ledlow and Weisinger were sentenced to be hung and Ivy to the penitentiary for life—the extreme youth of the latter saving him from the gallows. The following is an extract from the Times in regard to the hanging:

The prisoners spoke to the crowd for about ten minutes, at the end of which time Ledlow was completely composed, but Weisinger was moved to tears. The last named seeing Mr. W. T. Weisinger (son of the murdered man) in front of him said "Mars Willie, you think I killed ole Marster, but I didn't." At this Mr. Weisinger shook his head, when Al. exclaimed, "You shake your head now, but when you get to Heaven you'll know who'se guilty and who ain't guilty."

"FORE GOD I AIN'T THE MAN,"

"nor me either" broke in Ledlow, who stopped looking at the rope by his side long enough to say so. Three colored Baptist ministers, Revs. R. A. Brown, Harry Blevins, and W. L. Walker, were on the platform and prayed and sang with the men. Ledlow joined in the singing, but Weisinger who was fast weakening kept his eyes moving about the enclosure. The ministers before quitting the men again and again exhorted them if they knew anything concerning the crime to tell it then, as God would not permit them to enter the Kingdom if they left this world with a lie on their lips. "I knows all dat" they both promptly said "and dat's why I can't tell anything but the truth, added Ledlow, "I know I'm going to glory right off and i'm willing and prepared to die." While he had been saying this the Sheriff had placed the nooses about their necks and put knots in the proper places, and in a few moments were drawn down, and the gallows trigger sprung. At 12:35 after having been suspended fifteen minutes, Drs. Phillips and King pronounced the men dead and they were soon after cut down and placed in coffins. The Messrs. Brislin took the bodies in charge and conveyed them to the Brislin undertaking establishment on Water Street, from whence they will be buried at the county's expense, as none of either's relatives came forward and claimed the remains. The men met their death with the peculiar bravery of murderers, and with that exultant willingness born of intense religious excitement, which usually characterizes criminals on the gallows. In the minds of those conversant with all the facts in the crime no doubt of their guilt lingers. Why they refused to the last to confess their guilt is accounted for by some with the idea that they did so in order to shield female accomplices.

In another column will be found a communication from Col. R. H. Knox, in reply to the one of "Tax-payer," published last week. It does not answer the question of "Tax-payer," but only claims for the commissioners perfect honesty in all their transaction on behalf of the county. The honesty of the board was not called in question by either the communication of "Tax-payer," or our comment thereon, and an answer to the query as to "why the court of commissioners have failed to publish a report of receipts and expenditures for the county, as the law requires?" is yet to be made. Neglect of duty was the only charge brought against the commissioners, and which cannot be disproved, but which we are satisfied was the result of oversight and not of any dishonest intentions on the part of the board.

A cyclone originating in the lower part of Barbour county, Ala., on the night of the 27th ult., extended into Georgia, doing immense damage. Several persons were killed, and many houses in its track were demolished.

EDITOR VIEW:—In your issue of March 30, I notice an article signed "Tax-payer," and commented upon editorially, which in my opinion is calculated to do not only injustice, but absolute wrong to the officers composing the court of county commissioners of Chilton county.

Who is "Tax-payer," and why does he hide behind a nom de plume? Why does he not wait until the convening of the circuit court—only one month—before he arraigns the officers of our county, and have his name marked as "prosecutor," upon the back of the indictments, to be found by a grand jury, whose names you have already published? No one at all familiar with the management of the finances of our county, can be influenced or even prejudiced by such covert attacks as that of this nothing.

I do not agree, so far as political opinions go, with the court of county commissioners, but I do know that they are honest and that they have managed county affairs to the very best advantage. The records show this.

Henry Wilson, Esq., and Mr. C. Cary, of Montevallo, visited anton this week.

Friday and Saturday were beauti- days and we hope the farmers ok advantage of them.

Commissioner's Court met last onday, and transacted important siness for the county.

H. L. Wheeler, Esq., Attorney the L. & N. railroad company, s two legal notices in this issue.

Mr. W. A. Smith, of Dixie, has e thanks of the VIEW for a club subscribers from his neighborod.

Capt. W. A. Gullahorn, of Coops Station, pays Clanton a regular ekly visit. Young men like to sit their relatives.

A fast train will shortly be aced upon the South & North a. railroad to run between Montmery and Verbena.

We paid a visit to Shelby Iron orks last week, and were enterined at the hospitable residence Col. R. W Carter.

See administrator's sale of the operty belonging to the estate of T. McBee, deceased, which indes a fine saw mill situated on e E. T. V. & G. railroad.

A great many visitors including rmers, school teachers, drummers d probably candidates, were to be en on the streets of Clanton last turday.

Glad to see Col. Timberlake, of uisville, in Clanton. He says would rather hunt deer in Alama than eat figs in Florida, and ys "Clanton is the most beautiest city on God's green yearth."

The Birmingham Observer her- d's its advent as a Sunday morn- g paper with the following:

The man who is too close-fisted take a wide-awake Sunday paper ght to be kicked to death by a overnment mule.

Next Saturday will be the time meeting of the teachers of Chilton unty for the purpose of organizing Teacher's Institute. We are reested to state that the public nerally are cordially invited to tend. The meeting will be held the courthouse.

Our Calera correspondent makes very pertinent query as to wheth- Clanton supports only two stores, ot seeing any others advertised in e VIEW. We have eight stores, t it is just possible that the six erchants who do not advertise, ave no particular desire to sell eir goods.

A fire broke out at Maull & Ehrman's lumber mill at Lomax, on last Saturday morning, which resulted in the loss of about 8,000 feet of lumber. The fire it is thought was accidental.

Spring will soon be here, judging from the following latest effusion of a Clanton poet:

From off the running rivulet the icy chain is thawed,
And the flutter of the winglet of the dovelet is abroad;
The quacklet of the ducklet in the brooklet we can hear,
And the rootlet of the piglet will presently appear.

Conductor Callahan, of the S. & N. railroad has improved his genial fiz by turning out a handsome set of mutton-chop whiskers, which circle around his ears in "beaucatcher" style. He will have charge of the fast train to run between Verbena and Montgomery, and says Clanton may probably be the stopping point, instead of Verbena.

Our county is certainly not on the wane. A citizen not long since purchased a plot of land near Clanton, giving in exchange for it a yoke of young steers valued at about $18. Recently he was offered $800 for the same land, and declined to sell. Added to this, we are shipping our iron ore, to Birmingham furnaces, and our lumber goes as far north as Illinois and as far west as Colorado, and even the mother country is being given a share of the latter commodity. What is in store for us when all of our resources are properly developed, is not easily foreshadowed.

The new railroad from Lomax to the ore beds is nearing completion, and ore is now being shipped to the furnace. The company have 184 hands at work, and propose, as soon as everything is in good working trim, to get out one hundred tons of ore per day. Our clever friend, Mr. J. B. Boykin, is superintending the shipping of the ore from Lomax to Birmingham. We recently paid a visit to the mines, which on working days present a lively scene. Quite a settlement is springing up thereabouts, and it would not be a bad idea to establish a postoffice, to be known as Sloss' Mines. Capt. Hobbs, of the commissary, would make a model P. M.

A visit last week to Verbena revealed the fact that considerable improvement is still going on. Once set the ball to rolling and it is not shortly stopped. That clever merchant, Mr. A. J. Brooks, is having a large two-story store building erected, the second story of which he proposes to convert into a hall for entertainments and like purposes. Work has begun on the new hotel building, and will be prosecuted with vigor until it is completed, which will probably be about the middle of June. The Pratt Saw Mill Company were shipping lumber to Europe via Pensacola, and a general boom seemed to have taken hold of the place. The jovial and handsome Dr. J. S. Pitts has our thanks for several new subscribers to the VIEW.

Mountain Creek Items.

MR. EDITOR:—In the vicinity of Mountain Creek, as you know, there are two large steam lumber mills—one of them owned by the firm of Smith & Marberry and the other by Mr. W. W. Wadsworth. The daily capacity of each about 30,000 feet of lumber, and both of them furnish employment to about two hundred men. Messrs. Pyron & Goree also have a lumber mill in the vicinity. It is run by water power, and has the capacity of turning out 6,000 feet of lumber per day. It is needless, therefore, to say that there is an immense lumber business done at this place.

The farming lands in this locality are not the best, but with proper cultivation they can be made to yield plenteously. As has been the case in many sections of the State, our farmers have planted more grain the present season than has been planted for many years. It is to be hoped that all our Southern farmers may very soon come to see the wisdom and advantage of such a course.

We have a Baptist and a Methodist church, and both are in prosperous conditions.

A good school will soon be established here, by Mr. Thos. Bailey, of Marion, a son of Rev. T. M. Bailey, Cor. Secretary of the Baptist State Mission Board. Mr. B. is a young man of scholarly attainments and will no doubt build up a fine school among us. T.

Around Jemison.

Our town was honored on Saturday by the meeting of the medical fraternity of our county who were in consultation a good part of the day.

Mrs. Honeycutt, wife of Mr. J. M. Honeycutt is very sick. Her many friends are quite anxious about her.

Jemison seems to be the coming town of our county. We notice her streets daily crowded with wagons, and every store full of trading customers.

John Ray has killed five gobblers within the last six or seven days.

We think there are unmistakable signs that there will be pound cake about Jemison before many more days shall pass. "Ono" speaks for a slice.

Jemison is soon to have a Sabbath school organized.

Little Johnnie Glasscock, aged ten years, son of Calvin Glascock, died on the first inst., of inflammatory rheumatism. Johnnie was a sweet little boy. He is now an angel in the bowers of paradise.

Rev. T. F. Thomasson delivered an impressive sermon here last Sunday, exhorting the people to forsake their refuges of lies, and join the grand army of the Lord.

Miss Vonie Galoway, of Brock's Gap, is in town to-day; young men, eyes to the front.

Mrs. James P. Allen is quite ill. We trust she will soon recover.

ONO.

Farmers busy planting corn.

Prof. Burns has opened his school hope it will be a success.

Dr. J. J. Dawson is erecting a drug store.

Mr. J. M. Honeycutt is the happiest man in the country. It's a girl.

We think there is a prospect of some more pound cake being cooked soon. If so, and Ego gets a ticket, he will try his best to go, if he has to borrow some of the other boy's boots; and you bet he will do ample justice to the table. EGO.

Calera News.

Mr. Samuel McCauly, of Montevallo, has made arrangements for a lot upon which he intends building a two story dwelling for himself.

In giving an account of Calera last week I failed to mention the steam cotton gin and grist mill of H. C. Moss, and the fact that Mr Moss intends building a merchant mill in the next two months.

Mr Editor, you got things "kinder" mixed in last week's paper. C. L. Candler is the Railroad agent, and the handsome man. Mr Parker, the whistler of town, is a married man, and a handsome man too.

One firm in Calera sells about three car loads of corn a month.

Reader, when you come to Calera, if you will call on Mr. Chas. Werdman and examine his hundred and fifty specimens of Alabama minerals you will leave with increased assurance of the wonderful resources of our State. Mr Werdman has devoted a great deal of time in looking for mineral in this State and may never receive his reward but he "is casting bread on the waters" that will return to future generations.

If no disaster now occur the wheat and oat crop of Chilton and Shelby Counties will be the largest crop ever made, with an increased acreage, both crops are better and more forward than has ever beeen known before.

Mr Editor, before I received the VIEW of last week, I thought Clanton was a lively town of six or eight stores. I wanted to know something of your town (having never visited the place) so I examined your columns to see how much business was done there. I only found advertisements of two stores. Are these all the stores you have? Can't Clanton support more than two stores? RUFUS.

Parody on Hohenlinden.

In seasons when our funds are low,
Subscribers are provoking slow,
And new supplies keep up the flow
Of dimes departing rapidly.

But we shall see another sight,
When Duns pour in from morn to night,
Commanding every dollar bright,
To be forked over speedily.

Then to despair we're almost driven,
There's precious little use in living,
When one's last copper's rudely riven,
From hands that held it lovingly

But larger yet those duns shall grow,
When interest is added on below,
Lengthening our chin a foot or so,
While gazing at them hopelessly.

'Tis so that scarce have we begun
To plead for time upon a dun,
Before there comes some other one,
Demanding pay, ferociously.

The prospect darkens! On ye brave!
Who would our very bacon save!
Waive patrons! all your pretexts Waive!
And pay the Printer cheerfully.

Ah! it would yield us pleasure sweet.
A few delinquents now to meet,
Asking from us a clear receipt
For papers taken regularly.

The Circuit Court of Colbert county convened at Tuscumbia, last Monday morning, and within a short while adjourned for the term. The citizens of the county and the bar unanimously joined in petitioning Judge Speake to adopt this course. They represented that the year 1881 had been a most disastrous crop year; that there was great want among the citizens of the county; that there had been continuous floods for many days until quite recently, and that the present clear weather was the first the farmers had had in which to prepare their lands for this year's crop. His Honor Judge Speake listened earnestly to the request of the citizens. He replied that the courts were made for the benefit of the people, instead of the people being made for the benefit of the courts. Accordingly, the court adjourned for the term.

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
AND SPERMATORRHŒA.

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

WHAT BECOMES OF PRIZE-FIGHTERS.

"You want to know how much damage prize-fighting does to the human anatomy, do you?" said Ben Hogan, the evangelist and ex-prize-fighter. "Well, take a look at me. I am in much better condition than I was when I reformed, three and a half years ago, but I estimate that my vitality is only 50 per cent. of what it would have been if I had never been a fighter. The shocks and bruises that a man gets in the ring hurt him more ten years afterward than they do when he gets them. I have been terribly beaten on the head in my time, and those old wounds reopen now regularly once a year. When I was 25 years old I was so strong and healthy that nothing could tire me. I used to think that a man was simply a fool who got tired. But at present, when I ought by rights to be still stronger, it worries me even to stand on a platform and talk."

"Is the ill-health of fighters due to the pounding they get or to dissipation?"

"It is due to both, and to one about as much as another. But the terrible bodily injuries they receive are beyond dispute. The worst injuries are not always those which knock a man out of his senses. Severe bruises about the chest and ribs are much more apt to inflict permanent injury."

"How do prize-fighters die, as far as your observation goes?"

"They die prematurely of weakness and disease brought on by their injuries. In fact, they die at or about the time when, if they had not been prize-fighters they would have been at the prime of life. Charley Gallagher died at the age of 30, of consumption, caused by an injury received in his fight with Davis. Davis fell on him, planting his knee in his upper left breast. Brandy bears the blame of killing Tom Sayers, but, in my opinion, he died of the injuries inflicted by John C. Heenan. Heenan jumped off a train and hurt himself, and some lay the blame of premature death on that accident, but he died of consumption, produced, in my opinion, by over-training and by the punishments he got in his fights with Sayers and King. John Morrissey's death is laid on Bright's disease, but he had stood beating enough to kill ten men, and I believe that is what killed him. Yankee Sullivan is said to have been killed by a vigilance committee, but the truth is that he went crazy from injuries to his head he had received, and committed suicide by opening an artery. Patsy Riordan, one of the grandest men physically that ever lived, died at 36, a complete physical and mental wreck. Bob Riddle died the same way, the very flesh dropping off his fingers. Joe Womble died in a Montreal insane asylum. And so they go, all of them dying at what ought to be the prime of life."

THE HARE AND THE FISH.

The hare and the fish, having borrowed t[illegible]cco of each other for several mo[illegible], and agreeing perfectly on politics, [illegible]t out to make a journey together and see the sights of the world. They had not proceeded many miles when a wolf was discovered in pursuit. The hare at once started off at the top of his speed, but the fish called out:

"Do not leave me thus—I cannot run!"

"A fish who cannot run has no business to make a journey," replied the hare, and away he flew to save his bacon.

The fish hurried after as fast as possible, and both found themselves on the bank of a river, while the wolf was yet a furlong away. The fish at once rolled into the water and darted away, but the hare shouted after him:

"Do not leave me—I cannot swim!"

"A hare who cannot swim has no business to make a journey," and he sailed away, and left the hare to be eaten on the half shell.

Moral: An owl who had overheard the affair from his perch in a persimmon tree drew down his left eye and softly said: "You don't know a man until you have traveled with him."

THAT was rather a happy turn of Davidge's on the inspiration of Guiteau. Referring to this claim of the assassin, Davidge solemnly turned to the thirteenth and fifteenth verses of the Epistle to James, and read a rebuke to the prisoner from the very source of his pretended inspiration: "Let no man say, when he is tempted, I am tempted of God: for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth He any man; but every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed. Then, when lust hath conceived, it bringeth forth sin, and sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death."

IRA COOK was to have been married in Northampton, Mass., at the age of 66. He started for the Town Clerk's office to get a license, and doubtless was excited and nervous, for he fell while climbing over a fence, caught one foot between the pickets, and hung head downward until he was dead.

DECIDED steps ought to be taken to cure a Cold or Cough at once. We should recommend Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup. This valuable medicine is endorsed by the physicians, and you can rely on its doing the work every time.

THAT RICH EXPERIENCE.

A Free Press Interview Sustained and Its Source Revealed.

[Detroit Free Press.]

A few months ago an interview with a prominent and well known physician, formerly a resident of Detroit, but now living in New York, appeared in the columns of this paper. The statements made by the doctor and the facts he divulged were of so unusual a nature as to cause no little commotion among those who read them, and many inquiries were raised as to the genuineness of the interview and the validity of the statements it contained. The name of the physician was at that time suppressed at his own request. The seal of secrecy, however, can now be removed, as the important and interesting letter which appears below will abundantly show. In order, however, that the reader may better understand this letter, a few extracts are herewith given from the interview in question.

After an exchange of courtesies and a few reminiscences about the war, in which the doctor was a prominent surgeon, the reporter remarked upon the doctor's improved appearance, upon which he said:

"Yes, I have improved in health since you last saw me, and I hope also in many other ways. One thing, however, I have succeeded in doing, and it is one of the hardest things for any one, and especially a doctor, to do, and that is I have overcome my prejudices. You know there are some people who prefer to remain in the wrong rather than acknowledge the manifest right. Such prejudice leads to bigotry of the worst order. Now, I am a physician, and of the 'old school' order, too; but I have, after years of experience and observation, come to the conclusion that truth is the highest of all things, and that if prejudice or bigotry stand in the way of truth, so much the worse for them—they are certain to be crushed sooner or later. Why, when I knew you in Detroit, I would no sooner have thought of violating the code of ethics laid down by the profession, or of prescribing anything out of the regular order, than I would of amputating my hand. Now, however, I prescribe and advise those things which I believe to be adapted to cure, and which my experience has proven to be such."

"How did you come to get such heretical ideas as these, doctor?"

"Oh, they are the result of my experience and observation. I obtained my first ideas upon the subject, though, from having been cured after my care and all the skill of my professional brethren had failed to relieve me. Why, I was as badly off as many of my patients, with a complication of troubles, including dyspepsia, and consequently imperfect kidneys and liver, and I feared I should have to give up my practice. For months I suffered untold agonies. Dull, indefinite pains in various parts of the body; a lack of interest in everything around me; a loss of appetite: headaches; all these disagreeable symptoms were added to pains which were both acute and constant. Sick as I was, however, I became restored to health in a most surprising manner and in an incredibly short space of time, and it was this that proved a revelation to me. That was the starting point, and my prejudices faded rapidly after that I can assure you. I went to reading extensively, and analyzing more extensively, and since that time I have discovered many things of real value to humanity. Why only a few days ago I advised a lady who was suffering from a serious female difficulty and displacement to use the same remedy which cured me. I saw her this morning and she is nearly well; the pain and inflammation are all gone and she is around as usual. We have no right in the medical fraternity to sit back and declare there is no such thing as improvement or advancement, or that we have a monopoly of the remedies which nature has given to mankind. There are great changes going on in every department of life, and there are great developments in medicine as well. Thousands of people die every year from supposed typhoid fever, rheumatism or other complaints, when in reality it is from trichinæ, caused by eating poorly cooked and diseased pork. Thousands of children are dying every year from dropsy as the apparent sequel to scarlatina, when in reality it is from diseased kidneys which have become weakened by the fever they have just had."

"Well, doctor, you have got some new truths here, certainly, but they sound very reasonable to me."

"Well, whether they are reasonable or not, I have demonstrated to my own satisfaction that they are true, and I propose to stand by them, no matter how much opposition I may raise by doing so. Any man, be he politician, preacher or physician, who is so considerate of his pocketbook or of his own personal ends as to stultify himself by suppressing the manifest truth, is unworthy the name of man, and unworthy the confidence of the public whom he serves."

The above are some of the principal points in the interview referred to. Now for the sequel. The following outspoken letter from the doctor himself which has just been received is published in full:

Editor Detroit Free Press:

Some time ago a reporter of your paper had an interview with me which he said he would like to publish. I consented on condition that you would not mention my name until I gave you permission. I have now accomplished the purpose I had in mind, and wish to say to you (which you can publish or not as you see fit) that I had debated for a long time whether I would shake off some of the professional fetters which bound me with others for years, and tell the truth, or not. When I looked back, and thought of the tortures, like those described by Dante in his trip to the infernal regions, which I endured from dyspepsia, and recalled how much I would have given at that time for the relief which I have since obtained, I determined that I would take the step so long meditated, and thereby discharge a duty to my fellow men. If I could thereby save one poor mortal one night of the terrible suffering I endured, I would be fully satisfied, be the other consequences what they might.

My dyspeptic condition was produced by a torpid liver, which did not, as a consequence, remove the bile from the blood. This produced derangement of the stomach, inflammation of its coats, dyspepsia, constipation, headache, depression of spirits, yellow complexion, fat-covered eyes, chills and fever; in short, I was miserable to the last degree. I appealed in vain to my books, to my skill and to my fellow physicians. The mystery of my ill-health grew deeper. I traveled everywhere—exhausted all authorized expedients—but to no purpose!

When in this frame of mind, desperately in need of help, but expecting none, one of my unprofessional friends called my attention to some unusual cures wrought by a prominent remedy and urged me to try it. I emphatically declined. But secretly, and with the firm determination that I would never let anybody know what I had done, I began its use. It was only an experiment, you know, but for that matter, all medical treatment is experimental. Well, to make a long, and surprising story short, I experienced a sort of physical revolution. My skin got a better color. My liver resumed its functions. I no longer had to arouse the bowels with cathartics. My headaches disappeared with my dyspepsia; but still I was not convinced. "Nature did it," I reasoned. But, determined to push the investigation to the extreme, while I was in active work, I tried the effect of the remedy on my patients afflicted with kidney, liver and urinary diseases, watching every development carefully and studiously. Then I was completely disarmed, for the remedy stood every test imposed!

Under such convincing circumstances, the matter of confessing my cure became a question of conscience and of duty to humanity. "Here is a remedy," I said, "that has done for me what the best medical skill of the country could not accomplish"—and as an honorable man I will not suppress the facts. I therefor write you and most unhesitatingly assert that for all diseases of the kidneys, liver, stomach or urinary organs which are amenable to treatment, Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure surpasses any remedy I have ever known or used, and since physicians have so much ill-success in the treatment of diseases of these organs, I am prepered to accept all the consequences when I say that they are, if conscientious, in duty bound to use this pure vegetable compound in their practice.

Yours very truly,
J. W. Smith, M. D.

Statements so outspoken as the above and coming from such a reliable source, are valuable beyond question. They conclusively show not only the power of the remedy which has become so well known and popular, but the great importance of attention in time to the first inflictions of declining health. When professional men of such high standing risk their prejudice and willingly declare their belief in that which they know to be valuable, the public may confidently follow their example.

STUDENT LIFE AT ATHENS.

Modern Athens is strong in students. Not only do many youth pass through the lower schools and gymnasiums up to the university, but the university, being the center of learning, not for Athens only, but for all the Greek race, whether under Turkish rule or not, and offering an education nearly free to all, attracts to it ambitious young men from Thessaly, Epirus, the Ægean islands and Constantinople itself. Hither they come, penniless, but athirst after knowledge, take menial situations—every family has its man-servant, for it is not the custom of the poorest girl to go about alone—and thus they earn board, lodging and clothing while they pursue their studies and attend the university lectures. Education, indeed, is a drug in modern Athens; there is a plethora of educated men. A story is told of a traveler who asked a member of the Government, to whom he had brought a letter of introduction, where he could find a trustworthy Greek attendant to wait upon him, and act as guide and interpreter. To his astonishment the Minister replied: "Why not employ my brother? He is just what you need. He is a graduate of the university, speaks several languages, is a civil and obliging fellow, and is anxious for a situation."

There are hosts of graduates looking out for Government appointments, and ready meantime to turn a penny by any employment, however humble. The high esteem in which education is held, the large proportion of public funds devoted to it, and the eagerness with which it is sought and acquired, are among the most striking features of New Greece. The people manifest a natural and instinctive love of learning for its own sake and apart from its commercial value. The learned professions are accessible to all, and they are overstocked. Literary men abound, and find employment as newspaper writers and soi-disant politicians.

A FATHER and son could not get along well together on the same farm at Guthrie, Miss., and it was settled, after much bickering, that the son should leave. He paid all his debts, gave away his remaining property, and appointed a day for departure. When the time came, he shook hands with the family, including the father, who asked, "Where are you going?" "To the devil'" the young man replied, drawing a pistol and instantly killing himself.

MRS. C. P. HEMMENWAY, of Portland, Me., on going to her room at night, saw a man's foot protruding from under her bed. She made a remark, as if speaking to herself, that she must get a night-dress, and stepped out, ran up to the next story, and called a man rooming there. When he came down the ruffian was gone, but he had left a huge club behind.

A MARYLAND sportsman is having manufactured in Baltimore a complete suit of rubber clothing, by means of which he expects to slaughter numberless wild geese. The head piece, which will be the only part kept in view, is to be exactly in the form of a wild goose sitting upon the water and furnished with magnifying glass eyes through which the wearer can see his way among the game.

A SINGULARLY interesting case was lately referred to by the Brooklyn Eagle. It was told by Mr. W. A. Davenport, connected with the house of Messrs. Butler, Pitkin & Co., 476 Broadway, New York, and concerned the marvelous cure of Mr. Ezra D. Clarkson, near Newark, N. J., of a terrible case of rheumatism, which other remedies had failed even to alleviate. He was on his way to a hospital when Mr. Davenport met him and induced him to try St. Jacobs Oil, with the result named.—Cleveland (O.) Practical Farmer.

THE Supreme Court of Maine sustained the will of Horatio N. Foster, an uneducated deaf mute, 76 years old, who could neither read, write nor use the manual alphabet. The will was made by pantomime, dividing $7,000. Only one similar case was ever tried by the courts in the United States, and that in North Carolina.

THE Newark (N. J.) Sunday Call says: One of our Cincinnati exchanges cites the case of Mr. Haldeman, of the Louisville Courier-Journal, who was cured of rheumatism by St. Jacobs Oil. His wife was cured of neuralgia by the same article, and every member of his family of some pain or ache by the Great German Remedy.

A TENDER EPITAPH.

One of the most touching epitaphs ever penned is in Spring Grove, in Cincinnati, on the monument of Louise Kirby Piatt, wife of Don Piatt:

To thy dear memory, darling, and my own,
I build in grief this monumental stone,
All that it tells of life in death is thine;
All that it tells of deathless life is mine,
For that which made thy purer spirit blest,
In anguish deep has brought me great unrest;
You, dying, live to find a life divine;
I, living, die till death shall make me thine!

DANIEL WEBSTER'S hatred of sham was shown when he once went to Springfield, Mass., to speak in the height of a total abstinence movement, and, being invited to take a "a glass of water" before going on the platform, paused after the first swallow, and, looking the committeeman squarely in the face, said: "It's good stuff! Where can I get a barrel of it?"

THE extent to which Congressmen have degenerated into mere errand-boys for their constituents is sharply illustrated by the fact that, by actual [illegible], no less than 266 of the 293 Representatives called on the Commissioner of Pensions, in one day recently, to ask him for action on special cases.

Twenty Years a Sufferer.

R. V. PIERCE, M. D., Buffalo, N. Y.: Dear Sir—Twenty years ago I was shipwrecked on the Atlantic Ocean, and the cold and exposure caused a large abscess to form on each leg, which kept continually discharging. After spending hundreds of dollars, with no benefit, I tried your "Golden Medical Discovery," and now, in less than three months after taking the first bottle, I am thankful to say I am completely cured, and for the first time in ten years can put my left heel to the ground. I am yours, WILLIAM RYDER, 87 Jefferson St., Buffalo, N. Y.

COULD our enemies only know how much we have foreborne toward them, how would their hatred be penetrated by remorse!

THOUSANDS of women bless the day on which Dr. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" was made known to them. In all those derangements causing backache, dragging-down sensations, nervous and general debility, it is a sovereign remedy. Its soothing and healing properties render it of the utmost value to ladies suffering from "internal fever," congestion, inflammation, or ulceration. By druggists.

THE end of life is to be like unto God; and the soul following God will be like unto Him; He being the beginning, middle and end of all things.—Socrates.

An Open Letter.

MESSRS. ELLIS & Co.—It affords me great pleasure to make the following statement: For FOURTEEN YEARS I have been constantly suffering from chronic hæmaturia—the hemorrhage being at aimes very great, and at no time entirely trrested. The accompanying congestion of the kidneys frequently was acutely painful. I have had treatment by the best physicians, but their skill gave me no relief. The wide-spread celebrity of the Bailey Springs, in the cure of affections of the urinary organs, determined me to try them. I have been here two weeks and am entirely relieved. Indeed, in less than one week, all appearance or sensation of disease had disappeared as if by magic. I leave for home to-day, and make this voluntary statement, believing that too much cannot be said in regard to the wonderful effects of the waters here. Very truly yours,

N. W. WARD,

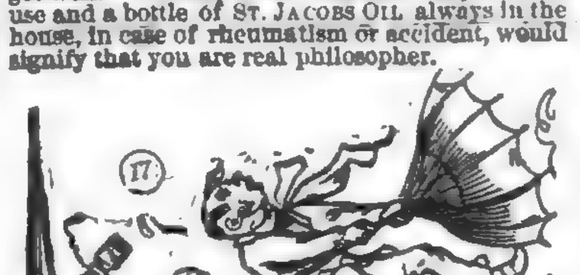
FACTS ABOUT UMBRELLAS.

Antiquarians say that the umbrella was invented shortly after the flood, and has been the least improved upon of all appliances for human comfort, the shape being now as it was in those youthful days of the world. An umbrella is much like a pigeon as to the question of possession—the last one who gets it owns it. The following facts about umbrellas—especially the last one—may serve every reader a splendid purpose sooner or later: To place your umbrella in a rack indicates that it is about to change owners. An umbrella carried over a woman, the man getting nothing but drippings of the rain, indicates courtship. When the man has the umbrella and the woman the drippings, it indicates marriage. To carry it at right angles under your arm signifies that an eye is to be lost by the man who follows you. To put a cotton umbrella by the side of a nice silk one signifies that "exchange is no robbery." To lend an umbrella signifies that "I am a fool." To carry an umbrella just high enough to tear out men's eyes and knock off men's hats, signifies "I am a woman." To go without an umbrella in a rain-storm shows I am sure of getting rheumatism, and will have to use ST. JACOBS OIL to get well." To keep a fine umbrella for your own use and a bottle of ST. JACOBS OIL always in the house, in case of rheumatism or accident, would signify that you are real philosopher.



The following communication to the editor of the Salem (Mass.) Register shows how an artist treated his visitor: "I would have accepted your kind invitation to visit you in your new quarters with pleasure before this had not my old enemy, Mr. Rheumatism, pounced on me so suddenly. He arrived last Friday, and, without stopping to send up his card, rushed in and grasped me by the hand with such a grip that in a few hours my hand and wrist were so badly swollen and painful that I felt as though one of Mr. Hatch's coal teams had run over me. Mr. Rheumatism has been a constant visitor of mine for several years; he always swells and put on a great many airs, making himself at home, devouring my substance and leaving me poor in flesh and pocket. Last winter he came and stayed two months. I then decided that the next time he came I would change his diet. I was somewhat at a loss what to feed him with, but finally concluded to give him three square meals a day of ST. JACOBS OIL—morning, noon and night. This fare he is disgusted with, and is packing up his trunk and will leave by to-morrow or next day; says he cannot stop any longer, as he has pressing business elsewhere. He is a treacherous fellow, and he intends visiting some of our Salem friends: if he does, just give him the same fare that I did and he won't stop long. J. S. LEFAVOUR.

THE FLOWN BIRD.

The maple's leaves are whirled away;
The depths of the great pines are stirred;
Night settles on the sullen day,
As in its nest the mountain bird.
My wandering feet go up and down,
And back and forth from town to town,
Through the lone wood and by the sea,
To find the bird that fled from me;
I followed, and I follow yet—
I have forgotten to forget.

My heart goes back, but I go on,
Through summer heat and winter snow;
Poor heart, we are no longer one,
But are divided by our woe.
Go to the nest I built and call—
She may be hiding after all—
The empty nest, if that remains,
And leave me in the long, long rains;
My sleeves with tears are always wet—
I have forgotten to forget.

Men know my story, but not me—
For such fidelity, they say,
Exists not—such a man as he
Exists not in the world to-day.
If his light bird has flown the nest,
She is no worse than all the rest;
Constant they are not—only good
To bill and coo, and hatch the brood;
He has but one thing to regret—
He has forgotten to forget.

All day I see the ravens fly,
I hear the sea-birds scream all night;
The moon goes up and down the sky,
The sun comes in with ghastly light;
Leaves whirl, white flakes around me blow—
Are they spring blossoms or the snow?
Only my hair? Good by, my heart,
The time has come for us to part;
Be still! You will be happy yet—
For death remembers to forget.

—Translated from the Japanese.

THEIR SECOND YOUTH.

The Lady Annabel sat in a small room her father's castle, looking out of a ndow which overlooked a wide landpe. Her maidens were in a little oup at the other end of the apartment ily engaged at their embroidery, ghing and chattering and whispering, t as they might were they alive now or this was many years ago and they all dead and buried. The Lady nabel took no notice of them; was thinking. At last she looked and yawned—"Oh, I am so sleepy thirsty! Mabel, bring me some er."

abel obeyed—and as she received the pagain, she said "Your Ladyship will be sleepy to-morrow!"

"To-morrow! What is to-morrow?"

"Does not your Ladyship recollect t to-morrow is your Ladyship's birth-? and——"

"My birthday? Oh, yes, so it is. I forgotten all about it. We are to e a merry time of it, I believe; but n sure I feel in no humor for merriment now. Lay down your work, girls, a little while, and take a stroll in the den."

hen she found herself alone, the La- Annabel walked up and down the ll apartment, then stopping before looking glass she said: "My birth-! Am I indeed twenty-nine to-mor-? Twenty-nine! that sounds old! ten years since my father came in- possession of this estate, and every of those years have passed one just another. I feel no older than I was n. I look no older." And she looked n into the mirror.

"I am no older in any one respect. I wish they would let my birthday by in silence, and not distress me publishing to all the assembled d that the Lady Annabel is now nty-nine!"

er reverie was here disturbed by the y entrance of her father.

"Why, what makes you look so down-, daughter? For shame! go down assist in the preparations for to-row's feast, instead of moping here. I must not forget to tell you I saw neighbor L—— this morning. We ed through his grounds, and he ed our hunting party."

t this the Lady Annabel's color htened visibly.

"He says he expects his son back in w months; and he and I were set-, that as our estates touch, and as has but one son, and I have but the ghter——; but I hear my men; have brought home the stags—one them has such horns! You must e down after awhile and see them." aying he left her.

"And Jasper is coming home," con-ed the Lady Annabel to herself. w well do I remember the first I saw him—it was on my birthday! s 12 years old, and, although he just my age, I was a tall girl and he tle boy. I refused to dance with him use he was a whole head shorter I—but if my father and his have plans for us——" this moment her companions re-d, and, quieting their laughing ntenances, sat down again to their roidery.

e next day was one of unusual fes-y. By mid-day the hall was crowded with ladies and gentlemen of high degree, from far and near. The music was loud, and dancing and feasting was the order of the day. The Lady Annabel, contrary to her expectation, was beguiled by the joy she saw on every face around her, and entered with great vivacity into every sport that was proposed. No laugh so loud as hers—no movement so full of glee. Late at night, when the guests had departed, she threw herself, flushed and excited, into a large chair in her own room, and began to loosen the rose from her hair.

So it is all over, and I have been happy, very happy, indeed I have—only the recollection that it was my birthday would intrude itself upon me, to damp my enjoyment, every now and then. I heard several people ask if it were true that it was my twenty-ninth birthday—they did not know it was my twenty-ninth. And that odious Miss What's-her-name actually said I looked very well for that, very well, indeed. I should be glad, I know, to see her look half so well, though she was, as she says, a baby when I was almost grown up. Twenty-nine! twenty-nine! Oh! I wish I was not so old!" and, covering her face with her hands, she burst into tears.

Let us pass over a few months. The neighbor's long-expected son has come home, and Lady Annabel is in a state of anxiety, for her heart is true to her first love, despite her twenty-nine years. Her father and his neighbor are a great deal together, looking over papers and inspecting boundary lines; but, contrary to all expectation, the neighbor's son turns out perverse, as neighbors' sons are apt to do, and begins a flirtation with a little girl of sixteen, as poor as a rat. His father frowned, Annabel's father frowned, and Annabel—she remembered her twenty-nine years.

This state of things continued for some months, in spite of various remonstrances on the part of one father and polite speeches on the part of the other. In vain title deeds were shown him—in vain the contiguous estates were talked over and walked over. Jasper remained immovable.

At last, upon being formally and rigorously appealed to by his father as to his intentions concerning Lady Annabel, he obstinately refused to enter into any engagement with her whatsoever, alleging as a reason that she was too old to be his wife, and adding, she might be informed of his having said so, for aught he cared.

Two days after he put the finishing stroke to his disobedience by eloping with the before-mentioned little girl of 16.

All this was conveyed to the Lady Annabel by her offended and indignant father. And now, indeed, was she unhappy—for she really loved this man, and knew herself to have been loved by him some years before.

"Too old for him, indeed!—too old for him! God knows my love for him may be older than it was, but it is only the stronger, the more enduring. Cruel, cruel Jasper, to cast me off thus; and for what?—because I am 29! Surely I am the same that I have always been. And he reproached me with the years that have taken away none of my beauty; he might as well lay to my charge the age that passed before I was born."

But so it was, in spite of all her grief. It was then as it is now, as it always has been and always will be—man speaks, and woman abides by it. The Lady Annabel pined, and grieved and wept in secret; and talked and laughed and jested about the elopement in public; and for a while no one knew that hers was a heavy-laden heart.

Tears do a great deal of mischief in the world. In the Lady Annabel's case they did a great deal. They took all the luster from her bright eyes; they washed away the color from her cheeks, and rolling down they wore for themselves channels in her smooth skin, so that by her 30th birthday people began to say, "the Lady Annabel is very much faded"—"the Lady Annabel is not quite so young as she was"—and one little lady, the odious little lady, as Lady Annabel had called her a year ago, was heard to say—"I did think she wore very well, but I don't think so now. To be sure, poor thing, she is getting on pretty well."

This time the Lady Annabel entreated her father to omit the usual merrymaking. She spent the day alone in her own room.

"Thirty years old! How it distressed me a year ago to think I was 29. I have no such feelings now. Jasper was right when he said I was too old for him. How would my careworn, sorrowful face look in company with his blooming appearance? They talked of a ball for to-night—how my heart shrank from such a thing! I at a ball! No—this dimly-lighted room suits me better. Jasper was right. But then, if he had still loved me, would my youth and beauty have gone so soon? Perhaps not—but they are gone. And what is left to me? A dull, joyless life of regret."

But she was wrong—she was not quite as old as she thought. A few years passed away. Her violent sorrow became changed by degrees into a melancholy, and then into a gravity. They rarely saw her laugh, but she was very often cheerful. She had put away her ornaments—her jewels—it is true, but her attire was always becoming and elegant. Her father's dwelling continued to be the resort of his numerous friends. She mingled with them but seldom, and smiled when the odious little lady, now Mrs. Somebody, talked about old maids. Meanwhile Jasper was never heard of—his angry father having refused to correspond with him. He seemed to be everywhere forgotten, and he was—everywhere but in one place.

But grief will wear itself out. After a while Annabel at first listened, and then joined in the conversation of her father's guests, and found herself by degrees returning the interest evinced for her by a country gentleman of some property in the neighborhood, about ten years older than herself. She was now 35.

The next thing was a wedding at the hall, and no one seemed in higher spirits than the bride herself, decked in the ornaments which had laid in their cases for five years. Annabel was young again.

Let us pass over five years of quiet domestic happiness—for, although her feelings toward her husband were very different from those called forth by her first love, still she was attached to the worthy man.

* * * * *

Her black dress and ugly cap, no less than her slow gait and saddened air, showed her to be a widow. Lonely and desolate since her bereavement, she has again taken up her residence with her father, and inhabits the same little room she formerly did.

A few months more, and her father's death increased her seclusion. She has no relation left on earth, and earnestly and bitterly does she pray that she may die, and leave this world of sorrows. She receives no visitors, and never appears abroad—only now and then, late in the afternoon, when the weather is fine, her tall, closely-veiled figure may be seen walking slowly through the shady walks about the castle, and the village children coming home from school peep at her through the hedge and whisper: "It is only the old lady taking her walk."

We said visitors were never admitted there, and they were not. So much the greater then was the surprise of all the servants when, one day, a fine-looking, middle-aged man was seen in the large parlor in converse with their mistress; this was repeated so often that at last it became quite a customary thing. She took no more solitary walks; her black veil was laid aside; her close cap again gave way to her glossy hair—glossy still, though streaked with gray. Her youth was coming back—for was not this Jasper—the Jasper of old—her first love? Poor Jasper! he had been unhappy in his marriage, and upon his wife's death had come home with his son after long years spent in poverty abroad.

"Jasper," said Annabel, "the world will call us an old couple. It is true years have passed over us. We have been old, both of us, but it was sorrow that made us so, not time. Sorrow has left us now, and time has brought us to this, our second youth. Is it not so? For, although they speak the truth when they say both of us have gray hairs, yet, if they could but see our hearts, they would say there is youth yet in them—as in the day when I would not dance with you because you were a head shorter than I, or the day when you deserted me because I was too old for you."

One line of Chicago street cars is propelled by an endless cable, revolving around a large cylinder driven by a steam engine. The cable is always in motion, a "grip" being let fall from the car, which seizes the cable, and the car is dragged on until it is necessary to stop, when the "grip" is relaxed and the car stops.

Chesterfield used to say, "Never walk fast; a gentleman is never in a hurry." But then there were no railroad trains or horse cars to catch in his day.—Lowell Citizen.

SMITH WANTED WHAT HE ORDERED.

Some years ago an Austin merchant, whom we will call Smith—because that was and is the name painted on his sign-board, sent an order for goods to a New York firm. He kept a very extensive general store, had plenty of money, kept all his accounts in a pocket memorandum book, and didn't know the difference between double entry book-keeping and the science of hydrostatics.

Among other things he ordered was 12 gross assorted clothes-pins,

12 ditto grindstones.

When he ordered the grindstones, he meant to order an assortment of twelve grindstones. The shipping clerk of the New York firm was astonished when he read the order. He went to the manager and said:

"For Heaven's sake! what do they want with twelve gross, 1,728 grindstones, in Texas?" The manager said it must be a mistake, and telegraphed Smith:

"Wasn't it a mistake ordering so many grindstones?"

Old man Smith prided himself on never making a mistake. He had no copy of his order to refer to, and, if he had, he would not have referred to it, because he knew he had only ordered twelve grindstones. So he wrote back:

"Probably you think you know my business better than I do. I always order what I want, and I want what I order. Send on the grindstones."

The New York firm knew Smith was a little eccentric, but that he always paid cash on receipt of invoice, and was able to buy a dozen quarries-full of grindstones if he cared to indulge in such luxuries, so they filled his order as written, and chartered a schooner, filled her full of grindstones, and cleared her for Galveston. They wrote to Smith, and said that they hoped the consignment of grindstones by schooner would keep him going until they could charter another vessel. Smith sold grindstones at wholesale, and at low figures on long time for some three years afterward. Now, when Smith's wicked rivals in business want to perpetrate a practical joke on an innocent hardware drummer, they tell him that he had better not neglect to call on Smith, as they just heard the old man say he wanted to order some more grindstones. When the drummer calls on Smith, and, with a broad smile lighting up his countenance, says, "Mr. Smith, I understand you are needing some grindstones," there is a painful tableau that the reader can better imagine than we can describe.—Texas Siftings.

INDIA-RUBBER GATHERING.

When the hunter has found a rubber tree, he first clears away a space from the roots, and then moves on in search of others, returning to commence operations as soon as he has marked all the trees in the vicinity. He first of all digs a hole in the ground hard by, and then cuts in the tree a V-shaped incision, with a machete, as high as he can reach. The milk is caught as it exudes and flows into the hole. As soon as the flow from the cuts has ceased the tree is cut down, and the trunk raised from the ground by means of an improvised trestle. After placing large leaves to catch the sap, gashes are cut throughout the entire length, and the milk carefully collected. When it first exudes the sap is of the whiteness and consistence of cream, but it turns black on exposure to the air. When the hole is filled with rubber, it is coagulated by adding hard soap or the root of the mechoacan, which have a most rapid action, and prevent the escape of the water that is always present in the fresh sap. When coagulated sufficiently, the rubber is carried on the backs of the hunters by bark thongs to the banks of the river and floated down on rafts. The annual destruction of rubber trees in Columbia is very great, and the industry must soon disappear altogether, unless the Government puts in force a law that already exists, which compels the hunters to tap the trees without cutting them down. If this law were strictly carried out there would be a good opening for commercial enterprise, for rubber trees will grow from eight to ten inches in diameter in three or four years from seed. The trees require but little attention, and begin to yield returns sooner than any other. Those that yield the greatest amount of rubber flourish on the banks of the Sima and Aslato rivers. The value of the crude India-rubber imported into the States annually is about $10,000,000.

A Chicago dealer advertises corsets for 10 cents. It is wonderful how cheap squeezing has become in this country.

THE FREEZING CURE.

By means of freezing parts may be rendered wholly insensible to pain, so that slight surgical operations may be easily performed. When the freezing is long continued the frozen parts may lose their vitality entirely, which will cause them to slough away. By these means, excrescences, as warts, wens and polypi, fibrous and sebaceous tumors, and even malignant tumors, as cancers, may be successfully removed. Small cancers may sometimes be cured by repeated and long-continued freezing. Their growth may certainly be impeded by this means. A convenient mode of application in cancer of the breast is to suspend from the neck a rubber bag filled with powdered ice, allowing it to lie against the cancerous organ. Freezing may be accomplished by applying a spray of ether, by means of an atomizer, or by a freezing mixture composed of equal parts of pounded ice and salt, of two parts of snow to one of salt. Mix quickly, put into a gauze bag, and apply to the part to be frozen. In three to six minutes the skin will become white and glistening, when the bag should be removed. Freezing should not be continued longer than six minutes at a time, as the tissues may be harmed, though usually no harm results from repeated freezing, if proper care is used in thawing the frozen part. It should be kept immersed in cool water, or covered with cloths kept cool by frequent wetting with cold water, until the natural feeling is restored. Felons may often be cured, especially when they first begin, by freezing two or three times. Lumbago and sciatica, as well as other forms of neuralgia, are sometimes almost instantly relieved by freezing of the skin immediately above the painful part. We have cured some of the most obstinate cases of sciatica by this means, after other remedies had failed.—Dr. J. H. Kellogg, in Physician.

A CUP OF GOOD COFFEE.

Lord Beaconsfield, with his wide experience, wrote in "Endymion" that a cup of good coffee is the rarest and most delicious beverage in the world. Bad coffee is certainly the rule, good coffee the exception. There is no reason why coffee should not be invariably good. With a common tin coffee pot, pure water and a fine quality of coffee, as fragrant and delicious a beverage as any one need care to drink can be prepared without any extraordinary effort or trouble. This recipe will always insure excellent coffee: Mix the ground coffee with the white of an egg and a little cold water, stirring them well together; add one-third of the amount required of cold water, and set the pot on the stove where it will heat gradually. As soon as it comes to a boil, add another portion of the water, and in like manner the third portion. After the whole quantity of water has been added, let it boil at once, pour a little cold water into the pot, remove from the stove, and, after standing a few minutes to settle, it will be ready for use. This method, which is still simpler, is also good: Mix the ground coffee with a small quantity of cold water to a paste, and let it steep for an hour or longer. When needed, add as much boiling water as desired, and let it stand for ten or fifteen minutes where it will keep hot but not boil. Cold water makes a stronger infusion, and extracts the aroma of coffee better than hot water—and allowing it to reach the boiling point destroys the taste of rawness incident to most coffees steeped in or filtered with boiling water.

An amusing incident occurred at the Pension Office the other day. One of the examiners, in looking over the papers of an applicant for a pension, found that it was indorsed by Rutherford B. Hayes, of Fremont, Ohio. As is customary when the character of the persons indorsing the claim are unknown, the Postmaster of the town is written to for information. The examiner evidently did not know who Rutherford B. Hayes was, as he wrote to the Postmaster at Fremont, Ohio, making the usual inquiries. Greatness disappears with unusual rapidity.

Vermont has for years been the chief reliance of American sheep-growers for fine-wool animals, and the trade in merino sheep from the Green Mountain State is steadily on the increase. Four-fifths of these sheep were shipped to Ohio, Michigan, and Texas.

To the Farmers.

A hot close summer intimates a prolific crop year with proper cultivation, after early planting. Last summer's crop was not destroyed by the drouth, so much as by late planting and bad cultivation, or failure to cultivate in the proper time. However, the summer was dryer than the coming season is likely to be. If the crop is pitched early enough this year, it should be pushed by thorough cultivation before the drouth gets a hold on it. Later in the season the upper crust should be kept open or pulverized by small plows, or the hoe used just after showers. Do not let the soil bake after a heavy rain, as an immature crop will be the result in most instances. I anticipate a humid atmosphere, and if there is not enough rain in places, the crop may be saved by proper ventilation.

Too Good To Loose.

Now it came to pass in those days there was a law in the land which forbid the sale of whiskey, wine, gin or beer; and the people around about were dry—yea, even like unto a powder-horn.

And William, whose surname was ——, took counsel with himself saying: "Its devilish hard on a fellow.

The same being interpreted means that he objected to the law.

Now in the 1st week of the 3d month of the year. William called his servant to him, and commanded him, saying:

"Here, you kinky-headed cuss, arise, take these three pieces of silver and get thee gone to the city that lies over beyond the river. And when thou hast come unto the city, buy a gallon of whiskey, and return by the shortest way, for verily am I exceedingly dry."

And it was about the 6th hour of the morning when the servant departed, for the city lay a great way off, and the roads were bad.

Now about the 3d hour of the evening William, whose surname was ——, went forth upon the highways of the village, and unto as many of his friends as he met, he spoke as follows:

"Behold I have sent after a jug of "old reliable." Come to my place of abode about the 7th hour of the day and we will have an exceedingly large time; yea, verily will we woop-em-up."

And when the evening had come they were all gathered together, as many as were asked; and the jug was in their midst.

Now it came to pass that when William had tasted the contents of of the jug, he spake in a voice that sounded like unto the bray of the festive mule, saying: "Cuss that nigger! this is water."

And when each of the crowd had tasted thereof they knew he was correct. And as they departed, they blessed the negro in a language of which there is no interpretation. But the negro wist not that it was so; neither did he care. Out on the suburbs of the village he was lying down, and as he listened to the sighing of the wind thro' the pines, he softly murmured: "Bes' drunk I's been on in 5 years."

Jemison Items.

Jemison is perhaps an exception to any other town in the country. There is not a loafer to be found in all her surroundings. Everybody is doing something to make a living. What other town can say as much?

Mr. Burns' school has opened with very flattering prospects. The want of a good school has long retarded the prosperity of Jemison, and now that the indications are that this want will no longer be felt, we see no good reason why Jemison, with her varied attractions, beautiful location, good health and excellent water, should not soon rival any of her neighboring towns.

Hand & Co.'s drying house at Pine Hill is just completed at a cost of about forty-five hundred dollars.

About forty-five names were enrolled last Sunday with a view to the organization of a Sabbath school. OSO.

Calera News.

Messrs. J. D. Hardy, Calera, and S. S. Holbrook of Montevallo left Calera for Washington City last week.

The Sheriff of Shelby county was in Calera last Saturday, he found his man but could not get in the right distance to take him, he ran through the back door of a store and jumped a five foot fence.

The railroad agent at Calera handles more freight and sells more tickets than Rome or Birmingham. If the Observer disputes this, let him give the figures and we will show ours.

The new Breazeal Hotel will contain about forty rooms and will have all the modern improvements, such as gas-lights, bath-rooms, water pipes in each room, barber shop, room for commercial men to exhibit their samples in, etc.

A Panic Not Improbable.

The Boston Herald thinks that a business "panic" is among the possibilities of the future. By fearing it, perhaps it may be averted. It says:

"Whether we are to have another panic in the money market and hard times or not, we are proceeding in the right way to get it. Our ridiculous tariff is unnaturally stimulating manufactures which must find their market at home because we can not compete with the manufacturers of other countries, and speculation has inflated the prices of our great staple products so much as to decrease exportation. Add to these the building of railroads far beyond the present demand and the inflation of stocks above actual values. A little panic now is a good thing. It is time to take soundings. It seems that we have not yet learned how to handle our enormous resources. Our exports are mostly of products which are not protected. Meanwhile our manufacturers are detached and divided from the world's markets by a tariff which creates abnormal prices here. Should the home supply more than meet the home demand for steel rails, pig iron, or any other article, there would be no way of relief except at a loss. It is delightful going up in a balloon, but the coming down is perilous. We are not looking for a panic at present, but there is trouble ahead.

At the last election of officers for Chilton Lodge No. 32, K. of P., the following were elected:

H. J. Callen, C. C., O. A. Duke, V. C., W. F. Stewart, K. of R. & S., W. J. Simpson, M. of F., I. D. Lanier, M. of E., J. S. Edwards, M. at A.

HAIR TURNING WHITE IN A SINGLE NIGHT.

About fifteen years ago a young man named Henry Rickards, who lived at Terre Haute, Ind., was going home one evening about dark from a visit to a friend, and was walking along the railroad track. Some little distance from town was a very high trestlework over a creek, there being no planks placed across for walking, so that people had to go over on the ties.

Rickards was walking along at a lively rate, and when he arrived at the bridge he did not stop to think that a train coming in was then due, but, being in a hurry to get home, he started to walk across on the crossties. He had gotten nearly half-way across the bridge when the train came slipping around a curve at a lively rate. He saw the train at once and started to run, but saw that it was useless as it would certainly overtake him before he could get off the bridge.

He was now in a terrible plight. To jump off was certain death, and if he remained on the track the train would crush him to pieces. There was no woodwork beneath the bridge for him to hang on to, so he saw that his only chance was to swing on to a small iron rod that passed under the crossties. No time was to be lost as the train was nearly on the end of the bridge. So he swung himself under the ties, and in a few moments was hanging on for dear life. The engineer had seen him just before he swung under the bridge, and tried to stop the train, but did more harm than good, as he only succeeded in checking the speed of the train and made it a longer time in passing over the form of Rickards. As the engine passed over the coals of fire from the ashpan dropped out, and a number of them dropped on his hands, burning the flesh to the bone, as he could not shake them off, and to let go would have been certain death.

The trial was at length over, and, nearly dead from fright and exhaustion with his hands burned in a terrible manner, Rickards swung himself upon the bridge again and ran home. When he reached there his hair had not turned, but in a short time afterward it began to get gray, and by morning was almost perfectly white.—Louisville Courier Journal.

New England and "the Athens of America" will scarcely be prepared to believe that young Nebraska leads the United States in the ratio of intelligence, yet this fact will be shown by the census reports. Only 1.73 per centum of her population are illiterate. Ohio comes next, with only 2.71 per cent.; Illinois is third, with 3.15 per cent. of her population illiterate; then come in order New York, with a percentage of 3.28; Pennsylvania, 3.41, and then Massachusetts, 4.24. The highest percentage of illiteracy is in South Carolina, where 32.32 per cent. of the population cannot read and where less than 45 cents per capita per year is expended for educational purposes. It may be said of all the States of the Northwest that they brought with them their old New England notions of education and impressed them upon the communities where they settled. And it cannot be less than gratifying to note the results, especially when we take into account the large foreign population found in every new State, and the struggles with poverty that are always the lot of the pioneer.

The National Board of Health has formulated a statement showing the number of deaths from small-pox which occurred in 66 cities of the Union during the year 1881. In Philadelphia there were 1,319 fatal cases during the year. Chicago had 822 deaths; New York, 454; but Pittsburgh in proportion to population had a much larger death rate from small-pox, her mortality reaching 444. Jersey City records 202 deaths, and Wilmington, Del., with a population of 42,000, shows 118. Allegheny, Pa., 108; Richmond, 144; Brownsville, 65; Cincinnati, 59; San Francisco, 47; Louisville, 18; Plainfield, N. J., 24, and Brooklyn, N. Y., 84 fatal cases. Washington and the District of Columbia escaped with but two deaths.

At a recent performance of "The Pirates of Penzance" in Washington, Gen. Sherman sat in a box, and, as Maj. Gen. Stanley came upon the stage to sing the "Modern Major General," he saluted old Tecumseh. The audience noted it and cheered, but as soon as the confusion had subsided Gen. Sherman was heard to remark: "No Major General ever delivered a salute like that, young man; come to my headquarters in the morning and I'll show you how to do it." The actor took him at his word, and when Gen. Sherman arrived at the War Department the next day he found him awaiting his lesson in military etiquette.

An analysis of the census at New York city shows that the foreign-born residents are 478,670, or a little over one-third of the whole. The Irish exceed all other nationalities, their number, if the figures are accurate, being 198,595. Germany comes next, with 163,482.

GRANT ON LINCOLN.

I had never met him until I came East in 1864 to take command of all the armies. I had heard very much of him. I had heard much of his fund of anecdote. I was led to suppose that he was a man who passed away his time in telling little stories, and sometimes stories that it would not do to repeat except in society entirely composed of gentlemen. He spent a good deal of time with me at City Point, and I saw him on intimate terms. I never heard a word from Mr. Lincoln himself that could not be said in the society of a lady. He had a fund of anecdotes, and it was always to illustrate a point. I scarcely ever heard him talk in my life but that, after stating the case very clearly, he did not add some little anecdote to illustrate exactly what he meant and to give point to it. I will give you one of the stories that I heard him tell, as an indication. After the surrender of Appomattox I started back to Washington to stop enlistments and the purchasing of supplies. Gen. Meade forwarded a letter to me from Gov. Smith, of Virginia, in which he said he had temporarily taken the State Government to Danville. He wished to know whether he would be permitted to carry on the functions of his office unmolested. If he was not permitted to do so he wished to know whether he and his friends would be permitted to leave the country without molestation. I referred the matter to Mr. Lincoln a few moments afterward, and he said: "Well, now, I am just like my friend McGroriarify, of Springfield. He was very fond of drinking. His friends persuaded him to join the temperance society, but he was so much in the habit of drinking that he had to go through the motions of drink by taking soda water; but one day he held the glass behind his back and said: 'Doctor, could you not put in a drop unbeknownst to meself?'" And I knew then what I was to do, and what I was to reply to Gov. Smith's letter, as well as if Mr. Lincoln had made a speech as long as the speech of Senator McDonald.

THE ENGLISH PAPER TAX.

At the time I commenced the Journal the duty on paper paid by the manufacturer was 3d per pound weight, which formed a grevious burden on every sort of publication. About 1840 publishers generally began to make earnest efforts to get rid of this tax, which pressed with special cruelty on the cheaper class of works. In this movement, which on a lesser scale resembled the Corn-law agitation, I took a somewhat conspicuous part. The "Miscellany of Useful and Entertaining Tracts," issued by W. & R. Chambers, and which extended to 20-shilling volumes, with a circulation of 80,000 copies, was absolutely choked to death by the tax. The anticipated profits on the work were literally nothing, for the whole had been absorbed by the duties on paper. The Government, with no trouble or risk, having got all the profits on this popular little work, it was given up. Cases of this kind were impressed upon the attention of the Legislature. Mr. Milner Gibson, member of Parliament, zealously helped the movement, which was at length successful. The repeal of the paper duty took effect on Oct. 1, 1861. Already, in 1853, the advertisement duty, 18d each, had been removed; and in 1855 the newspaper stamp was abolished; wherefore, with the abolition of the paper duty, 1861, the press in all its departments was set thoroughly free from fiscal exactions. In these few facts young people wil learn how newspapers have been so wondrously cheapened and extended in circulation.—W. Chambers, in Chambers' Journal.

WHAT THE LADY ASKED THE BURGLAR.

A lady in New Orleans found herself and family of little ones compelled to pass the night without the protection of a man in the house, her husband being in the North. Being a good shot she was not alarmed, however, but put her revolver handy when she retired at night. About midnight she heard a noise as if some one was trying to get into the house. She went softly on to the gallery, revolver in hand, and, sure enough there was a man down at the window, prying open the shutter with a long knife. After watching him for a moment, undecided what to do, knowing that if she chose she could kill him, she leaned over the railing and called out, "Shall I shoot you, sir?" The astounding question caused the man to stop work. He turned and looked up at her but made no pretense to run. She then fired at him and he retreated to the fence where he insolently regarded her in the moonlight. The brave little woman, not a whit discouraged, then determined to show him that she could scare him if she pleased, so, taking good aim, she put a tiny bullet through the rim of his hat. In less time than can be told the would-be burglar was over the fence and out of sight.

Now they speak of Crude Petroleum as a remedy for Consumption; better not try it, but take Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup,—the standard Cough Remedy of our age. It is agreeable to the taste, never fails to cure, and costs only 25 cents a bottle.

"While I was in Topeka last winter," said the Hon. Arthur Edgington, "I had a pretty rough time of it. I got a bad cold, and, then that not being sufficiently severe, I was also attacked with rheumatism. The pain was in my left shoulder. At times I almost writhed in agony. I tell you, sir, that the pain could not have been greater had my shoulder been screwed up in a vise. I was utterly helpless, and felt like I was destined to remain in that condition indefinitely. My friends and a physician were generous in their prescriptions and my room soon became a miniature apothecary shop. But nothing did me any good. One day some one told me I was enduring a great deal of needless pain when I could invest fifty cents in a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil and be cured. I invested in a bottle of the Oil, rubbed it on my shoulder twice, and in two days forgot that I ever had rheumatism. Yes, that is a great remedy, and no mistake. They can't say too much in favor of its healing power."

The above was uttered by Mr. Edgington while sitting in the porch of the La Gonda House, at Columbus, the other evening, and was overheard by an escaped reporter, who is traveling over the country incog. Inquiry developed the fact that Mr. Edgington is one of the most widely known men in Kansas, figuring prominently in politics, and acting as the responsible agent of the Bradstreet Commercial Agency. Upon subsequently making Mr. Edgington's acquaintance the reporter was assured that all he had heard was true, and he was at liberty to use it in the papers.—Oswego (Kan.) Democrat.

The eucalyptus tree now borders many of the roads and avenues crossing the Roman Campagna, and, wherever planted by the monks, it has driven off the malaria and fevers.

The St. Paul (Minn.) Globe, observes: Things had gone wrong with him, and he wanted to die; yet he had the whole house darting around mighty lively, so we heard, hunting for the St. Jacobs Oil bottle, when the first twinge of rheumatism gathered him up.

The Buffalo Express gives this advice: "If you must dabble in shares, try plowshares. No other kind pays so regular dividends."

Truth is Mighty.

When Dr. Pierce, of Buffalo, N. Y., announced that his "Favorite Prescription" would positively cure the many diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women, some doubted, and continued to employ the harsh and caustic local treatment. But the mighty truth gradually became acknowledged. Thousands of ladies employed the "Favorite Prescription" and were speedily cured. By druggists.

Somebody's Child.

Somebody's child is dying—dying with the flush of hope on his young face, and somebody's mother thinking of the time when that dear face will be hidden where no ray of hope can brighten it—because there was no cure for consumption. Reader, if the child be your neighbor's, take this comforting word to the mother's heart before it is too late. Tell her that consumption is curable; that men are living to-day whom the physicians pronounced incurable, because one lung had been almost destroyed by the disease. Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" has cured hundreds; surpasses cod liver oil, hypophosphites, and other medicines in curing this disease. Sold by druggists.

A goat owned by a Georgia Judge has long horns on his legs as well as on his head—eighteen in all—and he will probably form the nucleus for a fine Odd-Fellows' lodge.

In the cure of severe coughs, weak lungs, spitting of blood, and the early stages of Consumption, Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" has astonished the medical faculty. While it cures the severest coughs, it strengthens the system and purifies the blood. By druggists.

An Open Letter.

MESSRS. ELLIS & Co.—It affords me great pleasure to make the following statement: For FOURTEEN YEARS I have been constantly suffering from chronic hæmaturia—the hemorrhage being at times very great, and at no time entirely arrested. The accompanying congestion of the kidneys frequently was acutely painful. I have had treatment by the best physicians, but their skill gave me no relief. The wide-spread celebrity of the Bailey Springs, in the cure of affections of the urinary organs, determined me to try them. I have been here two weeks and am entirely relieved, Indeed, in less than one week, all appearance or sensation of disease had disappeared, as if by magic. I leave for home to-day, and make this voluntary statement, believing that too much cannot be said in regard to the wonderful effects of the waters here. Very truly yours,

N. W. WARD,

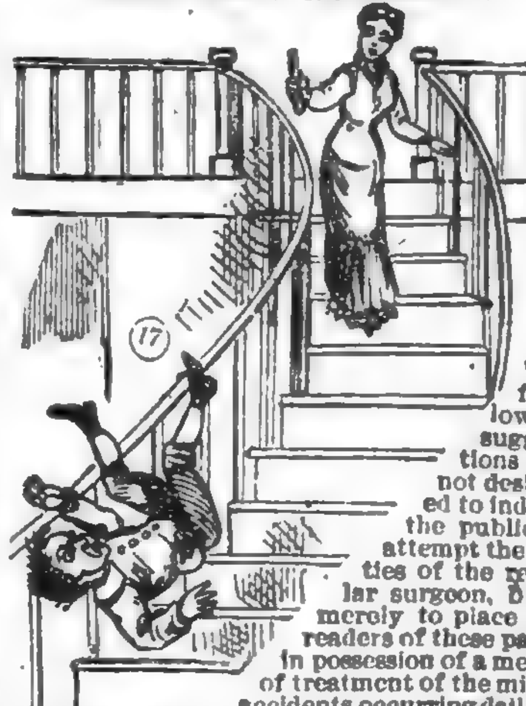
Poverty and Distress.

That poverty which produces the greatest distress is not of the purse but of the blood. Deprived of its richness it becomes scant and watery, a condition termed anemia in medical writings. Given this condition, and scrofulous swellings and sores, general and nervous debility, loss of flesh and appetite, weak lungs, throat disease, spitting of blood and consumption, are among the common results. If you are suffering from thin, poor blood employ Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery," which enriches the blood and cures these grave affections. Is more nutritive than cod liver oil, and is harmless in any condition of the system, yet powerful to cure. By druggists.

HOUSEHOLD ACCIDENTS



The following suggestions are not designed to induce the public to attempt the duties of the regular surgeon, but, merely to place the readers of these pages in possession of a means of treatment of the minor accidents occurring daily in the household, and which, while not dangerous in themselves, are exceedingly annoying. Burns, bruises, scalds, sprains, etc., are principal among these troublesome and annoying occurences, and demand immediate treatment with the best means at hand. In the kitchen, the dining-hall, the nursery and the sitting-room they are liable to happen, and, instead of fear and alarm at the sight of the cut or mashed finger, or bruised or burned arm, or scalded surface, a cool and quiet manner should be assumed, and after washing away the blood, (if required), the injured parts should be dressed with that most valuable remedy—ST. JACOBS OIL. Its surprisingly quick relief, its cleansing properties, its tendency to quickly remove all inflammation, and its wonderful efficacy in the above as well as in all muscular and other pains, such as rheumatism, neuralgia, toothache, headache, stiffness of the joints, etc.,—these render ST. JACOBS OIL pre-eminently the best external remedy now before the people; which claim is fully substantiated by the strongest kind of testimony from all classes of people. The value of human life is so supremely important that anything that tends to its prolongation is entitled to the highest consideration. Charles Nelson, Esq., proprietor Nelson House, Port Huron, Mich., says: "I suffered so with rheumatism that my arm withered and physicians could not help me. I was in despair of my life, when some one advised me to try ST. JACOBS OIL. I did so, and as if by magic, I was instantly relieved, and by the continued use of the Oil entirely cured. I thank heaven for having used this wonderful remedy, for it saved my life. It also cured my wife."

MOONLIGHT, OR MORNING?

BY CELESTE M. A. WINSLOW.

Feebly a light creepeth in at the casement,
Doubtful if yet it shall linger or flee,
Clasping night's tendrils with dim interlacement,
Waking a dull, dreamy wonder in me;
Is it the moon, in the wide west delaying,
Sending faint, flickering farewells ere straying,
Or, the first rays for a new day's adorning?
Ah, drowsy night, is it moonlight or morning?

Into my heart shines a brightness uncertain—
Youth's dreams are dim, and the skies overcast
Is it a ghostly hand lifting time's curtain,
Bringing pale beams from the moon of my past?
Or a fresh joy bursting forth into sweetness,
Wakening wan life to a new day's completeness—
Golden beams, chasing lost silver with scorning,
Tell me, O, Love, is it moonlight or morning?

Softly a light stealeth over my spirit,
Pressing the dusk of drear sorrow away;
Is some rare earth-joy returning to cheer it,
Filling my soul with a prayer for delay?
Or, a far-glimmering gleam of new glory,
Passing the light of earth's moon-silvered story—
Rays of remote bliss, in beautiful warning;
Say, watching soul, is it moonlight or morning?

HOW IT WAS DONE.

Church Torrington was perhaps the greatest coward in New York.

Don't misunderstand us, gentle reader—physically speaking our young hero was as brave as Bayard, as dauntless as Cœur de Lion. But it was where the fair sex was concerned that Mr. Torrington became a poltroon. A gentle glance from a pair of blue eyes was enough to throw him into a cold perspiration at any time.

As one by one the companions of his boyhood and early youth vanished out of the path of bachelorhood and entered into the promised land of matrimony, Church Torrington viewed them with a not unenvious mind.

"How the mischief did they muster up courage enough to do it?" was his internal reflection.

And Harry Leslie, a wag of forty, who always had a knack of finding out everybody else's weak points, said:

"All of that set are married except Church Torrington, and he'll be a bachelor all the days of his life because he hasn't got the courage to ask any girl to have him. I don't know, though, either," he added reflectively. "Wait till leap year comes round again; there may be a chance for him then."

Nevertheless, in the face of all these obstacles, Church Torrington was in love.

Miss Violet Purple was as pretty and blooming a little lassie as ever tripped down the sunny side of Broadway under a thread-lace parasol on a June afternoon. She was very plump and rather small, with soft blue-gray eyes, eyebrows like twin arches of jet, shining chestnut hair like white velvet, just flushed with the softest pink on either dimpled cheek.

And she had a way of carrying her head piquantly on one side, spoke with the slightest possible of lisps, always wore a rose in her hair, and was altogether precisely the sort of a girl a man's fancy was apt to conjure up when he thought of the possibility of a wife to cheer the gloom of his solitary home.

Violet Purple was born to be married—you couldn't think of her as an old maid any more than you could think of strawberries without cream, or a satin slipper without a dainty foot to fit it; and, whenever she thought of the probability of the catastrophe, a face like the mustached physiognomy of Mr. Church Torrington outlined itself through the misty vapors of her day-dream.

But Mr. Church was so dreadfully bashful—he wouldn't propose—and poor little Violet was nearly at her wits' end what to do in this dire perplexity. A girl of any delicacy can't very well ask a man to have her, and Violet had done everything else. She had smiled sweetly upon him, given him rose buds out of her ball bouquets, sent him embroidered cigar cases, and returned a gentle pressure when he had ventured to squeeze her hand at parting; and what, we ask the reader, could a girl do more?

And still, in spite of all this, Mr. Torrington persisted in keeping his love to himself. In vain Aunt Sarepta took her up stairs, and left the drawing-room free to twilight and the lovers—in vain Violet put on her prettiest dresses and curled her hair, with a special eye to Mr. Torrington's taste.

Old Mr. Purple—whose name was not a bad description of the general hue of his face—began to wonder "what in the world young Torrington meant by coming here so much and keeping better men away!" and hinted very broadly at the propriety of Violet's being more gracious to a certain banker, a friend of his, who was supposed to be especially attracted by the blue-gray eyes and the jet arched brows.

And little Violet took to crying at night on her lace-edged pillows, and Aunt Sarepta, a tall, spare, maiden lady, who had only recently come up from the country to take charge of her brother's household, scarcely knew what to do.

"Violet," quoth the aunt, "what ails you?"

"I don't know, aunt."

"How long has Mr. Torrington been visiting here?"

"I don't know; about three years."

"Does he care for you, Violet?"

"I don't know, aunt," she replied, blushing and rosy.

"Do you care for him?"

"I don't know, aunt," she said, blushing still more deeply.

"Then why on earth don't he propose, and have done with it."

"I don't know, aunt!" This time in a sort of despairing accent.

Miss Sarepta Purple set herself to untangle this Gordian knot of circumstances as she would a "snarl" in her skeins of mixed wools; and when Miss Sarepta set herself about a thing, she was generally in the habit of accomplishing it.

"I'll go and see him myself," was the result of a long day of meditation on Miss Sarepta's part; "and I won't let Violet know about it."

Mr. Church Torrington sat in his leather covered easy chair, looking out a difficult case in Estoppels when his clerk announced "a lady;" and, turning abruptly around, he encountered the gaze of Miss Sarepta Purple's spectacled orbs.

He colored scarlet as he dragged forth a chair, and stammered out some incoherent sentence or other—for was not she Violet's aunt?—the aunt of the fair damsel whom he worshiped afar off and in silence!

"Thank you," said Miss Purple, depositing herself on the chair, as one might set down a heavy trunk—"I've come on business."

"Indeed!"

"Because," said Miss Purple, edging her chair a little nearer that of the young lawyer, "I think it's time this business was settled."

"What business?"

"What business?" echoed Mrs. Purple, with a belligerent toss of her head; "as if you do not know well enough what I am talking about—why getting married, to be sure!"

Mr. Torrington grew a shade or two paler. Was it possible that this ancient maiden still contemplated the probability of matrimony? Had she then selected him for her victim? He looked at the back window—it opened on a blind alley, which led nowhere. He glanced at the door; but Miss Purple's gaunt form effectually debarred that means of egress. No—there was nothing but to sit still and face the worst that fate had in store for him.

"You see," went on Miss Sarepta, "I am not blind if I am getting into years, and I can see as well as anybody what you mean by coming so often to our house. But still I think you ought to have spoken out like a man. I'm willing, and I don't suppose my brother will object, as you seem to be able to keep a wife!"

"You—you are very kind!" stammered Mr. Torrington.

"Is it to be yes or no—about the marriage, I mean?"

"I shall be most happy, I am sure!" fluttered out miserable hero.

"Spoken like a man! It's what I knew you meant all the time," cried Aunt Sarepta, rising to her feet, and actually depositing an osculary demonstration, meant for a kiss, on Church's forehead. "I knew I should like you!"

Church stared. This was not exactly etiquette; but the whole matter was really so strange and unprecedented that he hardly knew what to think.

"And when will you come round to brother Jacob's and tell the folks all about it—for I suppose you'd like to tell them yourself? This evening?"

"Y—yes, if you say so!"

"It's as good a time as any, I suppose. Of course you won't mention that I said anything to you about it? I'd rather it should seem unstudied."

"Naturally enough!" thought poor Church.

But he promised, with a faint smile, and parted from Miss Purple, almost shrinking from the vigorous grasp of the hand which she unhesitatingly bestowed upon him.

No sooner was Church Torrington alone than the full horror of his position rushed upon him. What had he done? To what had he committed himself?

"It serves me right," he muttered, grinding his teeth, "when I could have won the love of the sweetest little fairy the sun ever shone on. It was simply idiotic of me to allow a middle-aged termagant to take possession of me, as though I were a cooking-stove or a second-hand clock! She will marry me, and I shall be a captive for life, simply because I was too much of a noodle to save myself. Oh, dear, dear! this is a terrible scrape for a poor fellow to get into! But there is no help for it now. If I were to back out, she'd sue me for a breach of promise. If I were to go to Australia, she would follow me there as sure as fate! I'm a lost man!"

And Church Torrington proceeded straight to the mansion where dwelt the inexorable Sarepta.

And, behold! as he knocked at the door, Miss Purple herself opened the door, and mysteriously beckoned him in.

"I saw you coming," she said, in a low, eager tone. "I've been on the look-out. Excuse me, my dear, but I really feel as if I must kiss you once more. We're going to be relations, you know."

"Relations! I should think so!" groaned Church Torrington, taking the kiss as a child would a quinine powder.

Miss Sarepta patted him on the shoulder.

"Then go in," she said, nodding mysteriously toward the door beyond.

"Go in—where?" stammered our bewildered hero.

"Why, to Violet, to be sure!"

"To Violet! Was it Violet that you meant?"

"To be sure it was! Who did you suppose I meant—me?"

This last suggestion, hazarded as the wildest improbability by Miss Sarepta, called the guilty color up into Church's cheek.

"Miss Purple, pardon me," he said; "but I've been a stupid blockhead, Don't be angry, as you say we're going to be relations."

And he took the spinster in his arms and bestowed upon her a kiss which made its predecessor appear but the shadow and ghost of kisses—a kiss which sounded as though Mr. Church Torrington meant it.

"Do behave yourself!" cried Miss Sarepta.

"Yes, I'm going to," said Church, and he walked straight into the drawing-room, where little Violet was dreaming over an unread book of poems. She started as he entered.

"Mr. Torrington, is it you?"

"Yes, it is I," said Church, inspired with new courage. "Violet, darling, I love you—will you consent to be my wife?"

"Are you in earnest, Church?"

"In earnest? It's what I've been waiting to say to you for the last six months, but I have not dared to venture. Come, you will not send me away without an answer. Say yes, darling."

"Yes," Violet answered, so faintly that only true lover's ears could have discerned the faltering monosyllable. And Church Torrington felt as if he were the luckiest fellow in all the great metropolis that night.

When Aunt Serepta came in, looking very unconscious, to light the gas, Church insisted upon another kiss, greatly to that lady's discomposure.

"For you know very well, Aunt Serepta," he said, "you set me the example."

And Aunt Serepta did not look very angry with him.

So they were married with all due flourish of trumpets, and Violet does not know to this day how instrumental the old maiden aunt was in securing her happiness.

HUXLEY ON THE INFERIORITY OF WOMEN.

Suppose, for the sake of argument, we accept the inequality of the sexes as one of nature's immutable laws; call it a fact that women are inferior to men in mind, morals and physique; concede all that the labored arguments of scientists and theologians have sought to prove. How or why should this settle or materially affect the subject of so-called woman's rights? Would such inferiority be a valid reason for denying to women freedom and opportunity to improve and employ whatever talents they may possess? Would it even be a sufficient reason for refusing them representation in a Government like ours, where neither "race, color nor previous condition of servitude" precludes citizenship? On the contrary, would not this very inferiority be a reason why every advantage should be given the weaker sex, not only for its own good, but for the highest development of the race?

MEXICAN BANDITTI.

Highway Travel as It Was Before the Opening of the Railroad.

[Cor. of the New York World.]

The road from Mexico city to San Juan del Rio used to be the worst part of the journey to the interior when one was obliged to travel by diligence, and was the part most infested by highway robbers. These highway robbers are by no means extinct as yet, but with the railroads one hears much less of them. When I arrived in this country for the first time, some nineteen years ago, I had the pleasure of being robbed two or three times both on the road to San Juan del Rio and on the road to Vera Cruz. I am glad of it now, as being robbed on the highway by the genuine Mexican bandit is a sensation soon to be a thing of the past, and I like leaving the track occasionally and being shaken up by new emotions. I was doubly shaken at that time, I remember, by the awful motion of the diligence, and my fright at meeting the "campaneros," as they call them.

It is a picturesque sight to see a band of Mexican "banditti" galloping down a mountain path on magnificent horses; their large Mexican hats, trimmed with gold and silver, shading their faces; their pantaloons buttoned down the side with large silver buttons; their pistols in their belts behind, their swords at their sides and their serapes—a sort of plaid of bright and variegated colors—artistically thrown over one shoulder and hiding their entire face with the exception of one eye, which glares ferociously on the unfortunate passengers of the diligence they are about to rob. Their Captain gallops at their head and shouts imperiously to the driver of the diligence to stop. In one trip in which I encountered them there was a lady among the passengers who wore a handsome diamond ring rather tight for her finger. In her fright she could not get it off, and one of the brigands said to his leader: "Captain, the lady cannot get her ring off. What are we to do?" To which the ungallant Mexican Fra Diavolo answered very coolly, "Cut her finger off."

You can easily imagine the cold shudder that ran through us all. Fortunately she at last managed to get the ring off, and we were not forced to witness an amputation. In another journey a more amusing incident occurred. There was a Bishop in the diligence, and they robbed him of his ring. When they had got through their operations, and taken everything of value we had, they knelt down and asked the Bishop to give them his blessing. He told them it was impossible to bless them without his ring, hoping in that way to get possession of it. They returned him the ring and he solemnly blessed them, but when he had done so they again took his ring and galloped off with it, leaving his Grace in the middle of the road exclaiming:

"Bandidos perversos! they have robbed me even of my blessing!"

Robberies on the Vera Cruz road at that time were of daily occurrence, and, as the brigands possessed themselves of the passengers' clothes, I have often seen, from my balcony in the Hotel Iturbide, men and women arrive naked. An Englishman said to me once: "I generally travel with two or three copies of the London Times. You know it is a very large newspaper, and in case of those confounded blackguards taking all my clothes, by Jove! the Times might be useful."

HARD WORK.

"What is your secret of success?" asked a lady of Turner, the distinguished painter. He replied, "I have no secret, madam, but hard work."

Says Dr. Arnold, "The difference between one boy and another is not so much in talent as in energy."

"Nothing," says Reynolds, "is denied well-directed labor, and nothing is to be attained without it."

"Excellency in any department," says Johnson, "can now be attained only by the labor of a lifetime; it is not to be purchased at a less price."

"There is but one method," said Sydney Smith, "and that is hard labor; and a man who will not pay that price for distinction had better at once dedicate himself to the pursuit of the fox."

"Step by step," reads the French proverb, "one goes very far."

Last year 11[illegible],400,000 shares of stock were sold in the New York Exchange, besides [illegible],000,000 shares of mining stock, and $[illegible]7,000,000 of railroad bonds. The recorded dealings in Government bonds were $[illegible],000, and in State bonds $[illegible],700,000—par value.

ETIQUETTE OF THE NAPKIN.

The law of the napkin is but vaguely understood. One of our esteemed metropolitan contemporaries informs an eager inquirer that it is a bad form to fold the napkin after dinner; that the proper thing is to throw it with negligent disregard on the table beside the plate, as to fold it would be a reflection on the host, and imply a familiarity that would not benefit an invited guest. But the thoughtful reader will agree with us that this studied disorder is likely to be a good deal more trying to a fastidious hostess than an unstudied replacing of the napkin in good order beside the visitor's plate. For, when the dinner napkin is laid aside, there is the fruit or dessert napkin to replace it. Fancy the appearance of a pretty decorated table with heaps of rumpled linen disfiguring the symmetrically-arranged spaces betwixt the sherry, champagne and burgundy glasses—to say nothing of the elaborately-decorated China and silver bouquetieres! It could be construed as nothing less than gross ill-breeding to fling the voluminous napkin of modern use among such crystalline and argentine beauty. The proper thing is to fold the fabric with unostentatious care and lay it on the left of the plate far from the liquids, liquors and coffee, and thus testify to the hostess that her care in preparing the table has been appreciated. The true rule would be to endeavor to leave the original gracious finish of the table as distinct when the dinner ends as when the soup was served.

The napkin has played famous parts in the fortunes of men and women. It was said of Beau Brummel and the magnificent George, Prince Regent, that they could make the uses of this peculiar luxury as potent in the graces of a social symposium as Cleopatra the gorgeous wealth of Ormus or Ind. It was one of the points admired in Marie Stuart that, thanks to her exquisite breeding in the court of Marie de Medici, her table was more imposing than the full court of her great rival and executioner, Elizabeth. At the table of the latter the rudest forms were maintained, the dishes were served on the table, and the great Queen helped herself to the platter without fork or spoon, a page standing behind her with a silver ewer to bathe her fingers when the flesh had been torn from the roasts. At the court of the late empire Eugenie was excessively fastidious. The use of the napkin, and the manner of eating an egg, made or ruined the career of a guest. The great critic, Sainte Beuve, was disgraced and left off the visiting list because, at a breakfast with the Emperor and Empress, at the Tuileries, he carelessly opened his napkin and spread it over his two knees, and cut his egg in two in the middle. The court etiquette prescribed that the half-folded napkin should lie on the left knee, to be used in the least obtrusive manner in touching the lips, and the egg was to be merely broken on the larger end with the edge of the spoon and drained with its tip. The truth is, luxury and invention push table appliances so far that few can be expected to know the particular convention that may be considered good form in any diversified society. The way for a young fellow to do is to keep his eyes open—which, unless he is in love, he can do—and note what others do. If he be in love, all departure from current forms will be pardoned him, for, as all the world loves a lover, all the world excuses his shortcomings.—Philadelphia Times.

We have heard of many shrewd advertising dodges on the part of managers and agents, but the following corrals the sweetened dough: Dave Thomas, one of Barnum's agents, succeeded in effecting an adjournment of the New Hampshire Legislature during a visit of the show at the capital in rather a daring manner. He got a reporter of one of the dailies to write out a series of resolutions relating to the death of some prominent person, and, handing them to one of the legislators, the latter moved that the Legislature adjourn out of respect to his memory. They were read, adopted and an adjournment had before the wise men of the body discovered that the individual referred to had been dead over three months. The legislators went to the circus, all the same, however, and took the whole city with them.

An old gentleman, being asked what he wished for dinner, replied, "An appetite, good company, something to eat and a clean napkin."

It has been said that a chattering little soul in a large body is like a swallow in a barn—the twitter takes up more room than the bird.

A man sometimes forgets, before he has paid, whether he has paid or not; but after he has paid, he never forgets that he has paid. Man is naturally a liar.

There is no accounting for tastes on this terrestrial sphere. A Frenchman's shrug is considered of no particular importance, while a Turkish rug is regarded with admiration the world over.

The best sermon in the world never yet reconciled the proud man, trying to curl his feet up and out of sight under the pew, to the painfully obtrusive and evident fact that the wife of his bosom had used his blacking brush to polish the kitchen stove.

A tidy young lady, short of stature, married a man six feet four inches tall. She explained to her friends that he would be so handy to have in the house; he could light the chandelier in the parlor and hang pictures without getting on the chairs and soiling them with his boots.

Tyndall's theory that heat is simply motion in another form must be true. Strike a piece of iron and it becomes hot. Strike a man and he immediately boils over. There is, however, one exception to the rule. Strike a warm friend for a short loan and he at once becomes as cold as an iceberg.

COULDN'T BEAT 'EM.

An Englishman stopping at a country inn in one of the Eastern States was continually boasting about the superiority of everything in England, and depreciating the productions of America. The landlord, as may be surmised, did not relish this, and therefore thought of a plan to get even with the boaster.

Procuring a half a dozen fine, healthy crabs, he poured them into the Englishman's bed, and, telling his guest that his bed was ready, he lighted a candle and escorted him up-stairs. Upon reaching the door, the man managed to put out the light. Of course it did not make much difference to the Englishman, so he undressed himself and jumped into bed. Immediately he gave a terrific yell and cried:

"Landlord! Come here! What are these in bed?"

The landlord, who was outside the door, and who had lit the candle, came and looked in the bed, and coolly said:

"Them's bedbugs. Can you beat them in England?"

A Dramatic Scene in the Federal Court at Huntsville.

A Huntsville special of the 11th to the Nashville American says: The trial of Joseph T. McGehee and Daniel C. Clark for violation of the election law in the late Congressional election in this district began in the Federal Court. The Government, after the examination of one witness, rested. The defendants introduced no evidence but were willing to submit the case without argument. The District Attorney declined to agree to this, and the case was argued to-day, when a dramatic scene in court occurred. Judge Bruce charged the jury at length, and concluded with the remark to them: "If you believe the evidence you must find the defendants guilty;" whereupon one of the jurors arose and said: "Are we to decide this case according to the law and evidence presented before us? If so we prefer to have our own counsel." The defendants' counsel replied: "You may decide as you see proper."

The court adjourned amid great confusion and excitement. The jury, after remaining out about ten minutes, returned a verdict of not guilty. The judge simply remarked: "The defendants are discharged; also this jury for the present term of the court."

How It Works.

A North Alabama exchange gives the following case of an honest, industrious and economical colored man, which illustrates how the present system of farming results:

At the time of pitching his crop last year, he owned two mules in fee simple. Upon these and the crop to be raised he gave a lien to a merchant to secure the payment of supplies furnished, not whiskey nor toilet articles, but corn, meat, shoes, &c. During the year one of his mules died, and one day this week, the farmer came in to settle up. The crop, all told was four bales of cotton, no corn, potatoes, beans, pumpkins or turnips. Of course the landlord's rent must be paid first; this took three of the heaviest bales of the cotton crop. Then the merchant was approached; his bill was $124. The other bale of cotton, worth at the highest market price $32, was turned over to him, leaving $92 of the bill unsettled. Now, the mule (worth on a forced sale only $40) was all that the negro had left—no corn or meat to subsist on this year—and this mule was all that the merchant had to get the balance of his account out of. To take the mule would not pay the debt and would also disable the man so he could make no crop this year; to furnish him supplies would be hazardous in the extreme. So an appeal was made to the landlord, in as much as the colored man could not cultivate the land unless he was furnished, to become jointly responsible for the store account, but this was not agreed to, and the merchant after having enabled the renter to make three bales of cotton last year for the landlord, has to trust to the seasons to enable his customer to make another crop and the uncertain life of a half-starved and ill-used mule to get, twelve months hence, what he ought to have now.

This is a plain statement of this case; the landlord got three bales of cotton, the merchant one, and the renter got nothing, and the merchant stakes another year.

Jesse James as a Hero.

[St. Louis letter to New York World.]

The intensity of feeling manifested in Missouri over the killing of Jesse James shows how it was possible for him to pursue such a successful career of crime. The fact stands out that numbers of Missourians regarded Jesse James as a kind of hero. So bitter is the feeling that an attempt upon Governor Crittenden's life is very generally expected. It is not believed that revenge will be sought at once, but that it will come after the present excitement has subsided.

We publish this week an article on Tuskaloosa of the olden time. It is from the pen of an able and distinguished divine, an alumnus of the University, who bears many fond recollections of the delightful old city and its gay and cultivated people. It will prove interesting to our Tuskaloosa readers, as well as others, and we publish it with pleasure.

It now seems to be conceded that Gov. Crittenden will pardon the murderers of Jesse James, as he has publicly stated that he "has no censure for the boys who removed him."

TUSKALOOSA.

Notes of the Old Capital—The Druid City and Its People Fifty Years Ago.

NUMBER ONE.

On the 12th of March, 1836, the quadrangle of the old University, first gleamed on my sight from the sublime elevation on the Huntsville road. That quadrangle, with its ample campus, was infinitely superior to the present arrangement. The youth, who at that day, was venturous enough to emerge out of the wilds of Shelby, into the gay and accomplished circles of the capital, was supposed to have his heart surrounded with triple brass. Only William Wolsey King, George D. Shortridge, Frank W. Bowden and perhaps Burwell Boykin and Thomas A. Walker (and these from the village of Montevallo), had preceded, as students of the University. St. Clair was represented only by Oran M. Roberts, on whom Texas has lavished such abundant honors. By the way, graduates of our University have been conspicuous for wearing the judicial ermine in the Lone Star State, not less than two of them constantly on the Supreme Court bench of late years.

A constellation of genius and talent illustrated Tuskaloosa at that day—Chief Justice Collier, Gov. John Gayle, John D. Phelan, Ben. F. Porter, George W. Craft, Judge Ellis, among the residents; James W. McClung, Jerry Clemens, C. C. Langdon, "Davy" Hubbard, H. C. Lea, D. P. Bestor, then, or soon after, among the Legislators.

It was "flush times." The State had borrowed capital to bank upon. Money was freely loaned to planters to "open their lands and stock their farms." The virgin soil of the country would soon enable the planters to realize a competency and meet their paper in bank. Such was the theory. "It was a beautiful theory." The banks issued paper in floods. Cotton commanded a good price. Everybody expected to get rich. Credit was unlimited. Gayety, indulgence, extravagance of every sort, ruled the hour. Presently pay day came. And then? Well, the state found herself some $11,000,000 in debt. But the young folks had had a good time; and some were tided through the fine schools at Tuskaloosa, who else had never been there.

There were many gifted and accomplished young men about Tuskaloosa in those days. Wm. R. Smith wrote a novelette, "The Bridal Eve," while a junior in the University, with some poems added, very creditable for his extreme youth, exhibiting the fancy and real poetic talent, afterwards so conspicuously shown. A clergyman drank the health of the bridegroom and of Mr. Smith once upon a time, at a wedding—"Here's to both your bridal eves"—which Mr. S. deprecated, but for no just reason. A. B. Meek, just out of college, was already distinguished for learning, eloquence and poesy. He possessed a magnificent person and magnificent talents. Scarcely any lyric in the language surpasses his "Land of the South," produced at a very early age. Judge Meek, a few years after, addressed the literary societies of the University of Georgia. A gifted lady remarked, "It was a speech that could be painted." Mr. Yeadon, of the Charleston Courier, the Ajax Telamon, of the Whig press at that time, ascended the stage as Judge Meek concluded, and grasping his hand said: "Judge Meek, I have been delighted, entranced with your magnificent oration; but I mourn over your ultra-Democracy; with your eloquence and your talents what a glorious Whig you would make!" John G. Davenport, just out of college, was the junior editor of the Independent Monitor, the editor-in-chief being the Addisonian Robertson, President of the LaFayette Female College, now the residence of Mrs. Dr. Eddins. Mr. D. was a sprightly, caustic writer, who so provoked the editor of the Flag of the Union, that the latter said in his paper, "he would chastise him for his insolence, if it were not for his youth"; whereupon Mr. D. procured a cowhide and chastised Mr. ——! C. C. Clay, Jr., was reading law in the city. Already he gave promise of his future eminence. And then there were there the peerless Miss Brooks, afterwards Mrs. Prof. Stafford; Miss Tunstall, afterwards Mrs. Senator Clay; and the brilliant Miss Drish, afterwards Mrs. King; Mrs. Ellis, niece of Wm. R. King, who presided over the social department of the legation in Paris, with such distinction, when her uncle was minister there. Ex illis disce omnes.

We notice that Mr. N. A. Graham, the able editor of the Shelby Sentinel, is being called out as a candidate for representative from his county in the Legislature. Should he be elected he would undoubtedly make a worthy representative.

Verbena Views.

Two weeks have elapsed since work was commenced on the "Verbena Hotel." To attempt a description would make these "views" too lengthy. Suffice it to say, that its arrangements and appointments, will make it a delightful resort for summer visitors in search of health and social enjoyment.

Mr. Herbert McGuire has removed with his family to San Antonio, Texas, where he goes to assume the duties of clerk in the hotel of that city. He carries with him the best wishes of numerous friends here, for his future prosperity.

We see from the proceedings of the Teacher's Institute, published in the VIEW of last week, that the name and subject of a lady teacher were inadvertently omitted. This we regret. The procedings should have been read and corrected before adjournment, but in the hurry to meet the train it was neglected.

Would it not be well for the President of the Teacher's Institute to assign subjects for discussion at our next meeting, as early as practicable?

"Consistencie's a Jewel."

The author of the above oft quoted and much oftener misquoted line, is not known. The poem in which it appears was published in Murtagh's Collection of Ancient English and Scotch Ballads, Edinboro', 1754. The poem is JOLLY ROBIN ROUGHHEAD; OR, THE PLOWMAN'S PHILOSOPHY.

HE.

Come, Joan, my lasse, fill up the glasse,
We'll drinke our own good healthe,
Tho' poore we be, contente are we,
We covet no man's pelfe.
Hard beds to tyred folks are sweete,
And hunger seasons plaineste mete.
So, here's to Joan and Robyn.

SHE

But Rob, my manne, if wealth were thyne,
Then Joan would take new graces;
Gaye as the beste, in satin dreste,
With jewels, silks and laces.
Then louting love the crowd would crie,
Whyle in our coache we past them bye,
Long life to Joan and Robyn.

HE.

Tush! Tush! my lasse, such thoughts resigne,
Comparisons are cruell,
Fine pictures suit in frames as fine,
Consistencie's a jewel.
For thee and me coarse clothes are beste,
Rude folks in homelye raiment dreste,
Wife Joan and goodman Robyn.

BOTH.

Then thus we drink our home brewed ale,
And gayle clinke our glasses,
Contente of minde and precious store
All other wealthe surpasses.
Clinke! clinke! drinke! drinke! upon his throne,
The King may envye Rob and Joan,
Then here's to Joan and Robyn.

Dimensions of Heaven.

The following calculation, based on a text of Revelation, is both curious and interesting. It is copied from the Charlottesville Jeffersonian, and will suggest thoughts for those who think:

"Revelation, XXI chapter, 16th verse: 'And he measured the city with a reed, twelve thousand furlongs. The length and the breadth and height are equal.'

"Twelve thousand furlongs—7,920,000 feet, which being cubed is 948,088,000,000,000,000,000,000 cubic feet, and half of which we will reserve for the throne of God and the court of Heaven, half of the balance for streets, and remainder divided by 4,096, the cubical feet in the room, sixteen feet square and sixteen feet high, will be 30,843,750,000,000 rooms.

"We will now suppose the world always did and always will contain 900,000,000, of inhabitants, and a generation will last thirty-three and a third years—2,700,000,000,000 persons. Then suppose there were 11,230 such worlds equal to this in number of inhabitants and duration of years—then there would be a room 16 feet long, 16 feet wide and 16 feet high, for each person, and yet there would be room."

Mr. John Duncan makes an efficient and attentive night agent and operator for our depot.

Stonewall Jackson.

M. Quad in Detroit Free Press.]

In these sketches, Stonewall Jackson's battles have been taken in reverse. We found him first on the blood-stained field of Antietam —almost at the close of his career, instead of the beginning. The world knows how he fought here. We found him at Kernstown fighting one to four—fighting, falling back, grimly giving way to fight again. We saw him strike the Federal armies right and left in the valley and fill Washington with white faces. We found him at Fredericksburg on Lee's right; at Chancellorsville in Hooker's rear; at Manassas behind Pope, on his flank, in his front. We have found him at Gaines' Mill. Fate waited for him before striking a last blow. It was the hammer in his grasp which shattered the Federal position. Without him Longstreet and Hill would have been pressed back, routed, annihilated.

A Christian in faith, a child in his sympathies, a general who cared not for the world's admiration so much as for the comfort of any single man who followed him in his wonderful marches. He had the courage of a lion and the heart of a woman. The pomp and glitter of war were not for him. His banners grew old and faded and shot torn. His legions grew ragged and footsore and weary. No matter who hesitated, Jackson advanced. Fierce in the heat of battle, because it was his duty to kill, when the roar of cannon died away the groans of the wounded reached a heart which had a throb for every groan.

Partisans may keep their bitterness of heart, but the world has spoken. The man whom they hate died forgiving all. Struck down at Chancellorsville, amid the roar of battle, he was removed to die amid the softest peace. Strong men wept like children when they saw that his last hour had come; but if they had a feeling of revenge down under their sorrow, he had none. With malice toward none, with forgiveness for all, his life went out as his pale lips whispered:

"Let us cross over and rest under the green trees?"

A Vile Conspiracy.

Jehiel Jasper strolled into the grocery store and postoffice of one of our back country villages Saturday, and after standing around with his back to the fire until he was permeated with caloric, said:

"Well, I guess I'll read the news and get along toward home. Square Perkinses' papers come yet?" and he stepped behind the post-office boxes, as was his custom, to take out and read it.

"Can't let you see it, Jehiel," said the postmaster, "Government has issued orders that any postmaster who allows a non-subscriber to read a subscribers paper will loose his position."

"No! You don't tell me?" Well, if that ain't a great idee! It's a put up job, a gol darned conspiracy between these ere newspapers and the gov'ment to keep the multitude in ignorance, so that they can domineer it over the community. And they talk about this 'ere bein' a free country. It's drifting right into despotism jes' as fast as it can. How in thunder's a man to know what's goin' on if he don't read, an' now the government's settin' down on all ideas of eddication, an' takin' away that privilege.

"Oh, not so bad as that, Jehiel," said the postmaster. "The government doesn't say anything against your subscribing for the paper your self, you know."

"Subscribin for it? What d'ye take me for? D'ye suppose that I'm going to subscribe for a paper that I've read fourteen years right here by the stove without costin' me a cent? No, sir. I ain't a goin' to help em' to oppress me by keeping me in ignorance. No, sir-ee." And having got a supply of cheap plug tobacco "put on the slate" he mogged home, a thoroughly oppressed citizen.—New Haven Register.

The following extract from a Danish paper is curious, if not strictly in accordance with fact: "The famous New York caterer, Delmonico, recently found himself in an awkward dilemma. His chief revenue is from meals served out of the house. The throngs in the street interfered with their delivery. Waiters sent out on foot were sure to be run against, and the dishes they carried to be upset. If sent in wagons the frequent street blockades arrested their progress, and the food grew cold before it reached its destination. Delmonico found a way out of the dilemma. He put the dinners in a hearse and formed a funeral procession, before which all other traffic gave way. The meals were then served triumphantly to his hungry patrons."

It seems that the Celestials are coming while they can. A dispatch to San Francisco from Victoria confirms the report of the steamers Euphrates and Escambia sailing from Hong Kong to arrive this month with 3,000 Chinese to work on the Canadian Railway.

THE PASTILLE
Prof. Harris' Radical Cure
Trade Mark
FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
AND SPERMATORRHŒA.
A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.
Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

THE MOUND BUILDERS.

The remains of the mound-builders, as the vanished people who once lived on this continent have been called, are scattered over most of the States of the Central and Lower Mississippi valley, on the sources of the Allegheny, and have been observed away up along the banks of the tawny Missouri, as well as down by the shores of the Gulf of Mexico. They are most numerous in Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Wisconsin, Missouri, Arkansas, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Florida and Texas, and are found in the western part of New York, and in Michigan and Iowa. A mound, until recently, was to be seen on the plain of Cahokia, Ill., nearly opposite the city of St. Louis, Mo., that was 700 feet long, 500 feet broad, 90 feet high, and that covered more than eight acres of ground. Some of the mounds in Wisconsin and Iowa are in the shape of huge animals, and there is one near Brush creek, Adams county, Ohio, that is in the form of a serpent, and that is more than 1,000 feet long. At Marietta, Ohio, are ancient earth-works that cover an area of about three-quarters of a mile long, and half a mile broad; but the most intricate and perhaps most extensive of the works of the mound-builders are those of the Licking valley, near Newark, Ohio, extending over an area of two square miles. Many of these mounds have been found to contain skeletons, and the appearance of the bones has led some to believe that these remains point to an antiquity of 2,000 or more years. A number of these works were evidently designed as works of defense, others as burial places for the dead, and others again seem to have been constructed as temples or places of worship and sacrifice. Among the remains have also been found numerous implements and ornaments, usually composed of stone, sometimes of copper (always in its native state) and occasionally shell and bone. Curious pottery has been found, often coarse and rude, but sometimes graceful and highly ornamented. It was not believed that the mound-builders had any written language. Prof. Newberry, generalizing the views of leading scientists, remarks that, from all the facts before us, we can only say that the Mississippi valley and the Atlantic coast were once populated by a sedentary, agricultural and partially civilized race, quite different from the nomadic Indians, though possibly the progenitors of some of the Indian tribes; and that, after centuries of occupation, they disappeared, at least 1,000, and perhaps many thousand years before the advent of the Europeans. Some have maintained that the mound-builders and the mysterious people who preceded the Aztecs in Mexico were the descendants of crews from Japan, whose ships had been accidentally driven across the Pacific. Another theory has been advanced that that these people migrated from Asia; they passed from the cradle of the race over Asia to Siberia, across Behring straits, down the Pacific coast of America from Alaska to the Mississippi valley, and down to Mexico, Central America and Peru. It is noted, by those who suggest this, that in Siberia mounds have been found similar to those in the Mississippi valley.

ODESSA.

Odessa has a population bordering on 200,000 inhabitants, and is thus in every respect the third city of the Russian empire. It has a magnificent position, for it lies high on ravines, which give it a wide command over its large harbor, lately improved, as well as on the open sea and coast, the striking feature of the place being its boulevard, a terrace or platform about 500 yards in length, laid out and planted as a promenade, looking out seaward, and accessible by a flight of stairs of 150 steps from the landing-place. Odessa is an old town, but it looks brand-new, for there has been of late a great deal of building, and the crumbling nature of the stone keeps the mason and whitewasher perpetually at work. It is lively, though monotonous, for its broad, straight streets are astir with business, and the rattle of hackney carriages, heavy-laden vans and tramway cars is incessant. It boasts many private palaces and has few public edifices, and in its municipal institutions it is, or used to be, taxed with consulting rather more purposes of luxury and ornament than the real wants of the people or the interests of charity.

THE WONDERS OF LONDON RAILWAYS.

Of the underground railways of the city of London some are beneath others that are themselves below the surface, their levels being at least forty feet from that of ordinary street traffic. Within six or seven miles of Charing Cross there are 260 miles of line in operation, and, allowing for double tracks and sidings, there are 750 miles—enough to make a straight line from the metropolis to Thurso, in the extreme North of Scotland. These lines are the property of thirteen companies, but each possesses by mutual arrangement on Parliamentary sanction the power of collecting and distributing traffic over other lines. The London and Northwestern trains run over forty-four miles of the lines of five other companies; the Great Northern Line, over thirty-six of six other companies; the Midland, over thirty-one miles. Such, indeed, are the facilities afforded in the metropolis for the interchange of traffic, that if a body of troops were sent from Colchester to Portsmouth there are seven different railway routes through London, any one of which could be taken. The Midland has eleven stations in the metropolis, the Great Western twelve, the London and Northwestern thirteen, the Southeastern twenty, and the Great Eastern forty. The different companies have of their own 245 stations, of joint stations 43, of stations on other companies' lines 210—in all, nearly 500, exclusive of goods, coal and cattle depots. It is estimated that the number of passengers using these stations is 750,000 a day, the Metropolitan alone averaging 180,000 every week day, while the journeys taken by season ticket-holders are simply incalculable. Of the Metropolitan stations for long-distance traffic Paddington is the most important. With regard to the number of trains several stations have 500 each, Liverpool street has nearly 700, Moorgate street over 800 a day, and Victoria more than 1,100, or an average of sixty-one an hour for eighteen hours. The passenger trains within the metropolis run a distance of 35,000 miles every week day, or 11,000,000 miles a year. More than £50,000,000 of capital is invested in them.—Boston Journal.

HAS the moment never come to you, gentle reader, when you have longed to be a hermit, to live in a cave, to wear a buffalo-robe, and have your meals sent in from the nearest restaurant? If such a moment has not come to you, you have never suffered from the attempts of a young dry-goods clerk to learn the violoncello.—Andrews' Queen.

Uncle Sam's Men.

Uncle Sam's letter-carriers are a hard-working set of men, and are liable to contract rheumatism because of the constant exposure to which they are subjected. Calling at the postoffice the reporter had a pleasant conversation with Mr. J. H. Mattern, one of the most popular and clever letter-carriers in Indianapolis. Mr. Mattern said that, while in the army during the civil war, he sprained one of his ankles, which was always worse in the spring during the period of the rapid changes in the weather. He did not find much relief from the several remedies he applied. But two years ago he hit upon St. Jacobs Oil, and experienced wonderful relief from its use. Several applications of the Great German Remedy relieved him entirely. The reporter talked with others among the letter-carriers and found that the Great German Remedy was popular in the postoffice. They use it for sore feet, rheumatism, etc., and praise it highly.—Indianapolis (Ind.) News.

Advice to Consumptives.

On the appearance of the first symptoms—as general debility, loss of appetite, pallor, chilly sensations, followed by night-sweats and cough—prompt measures for relief should be taken. Consumption is scrofulous disease of the lungs:—therefore use the great anti-scrofula, or blood-purifier and strength-restorer,—Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery." Superior to Cod liver oil as a nutritive, and unsurpassed as a pectoral. For weak lungs, spitting of blood, and kindred affections, it has no equal. Sold by druggists the world over. THE SPECTER OF THE VICKSBURG SIEGE.

I remember to have been standing on a knoll in front of my headquarters on a beautiful night listening to the fire of batteries. The moon was out in all its splendor, and the flashes that gleamed from the mouths of a hundred guns could be seen for miles to the right and left. Standing upon an adjacent hill to my right a tall figure was seen clothed in white. It seemed to be that of a man at least seven feet high, but the uniform was not that of a soldier. In tones never to be forgotten and that echoed from hill to valley and from valley to hill, the words "Cease firing" were heard from his unearthly-looking figure, as though he was commanding the world and giving the order, "By kingdoms, right wheel." Summoning up all the courage at my command, I hailed him with the inquiry, "Who on earth are you?" The prompt and emphatic response was: "I am Gen. Burbridge's orderly in my night shirt."—*Gen. An Open Letter.

MESSRS. ELLIS & Co.—It affords me great pleasure to make the following statement: For FOURTEEN YEARS I have been constantly suffering from chronic hæmaturia—the hemorrhage being at times very great, and at no time entirely arrested. The accompanying congestion of the kidneys frequently was acutely painful. I have had treatment by the best physicians, but their skill gave me no relief. The wide-spread celebrity of the Bailey Springs, in the cure of affections of the urinary organs, determined me to try them. I have been here two weeks and am entirely relieved, Indeed, in less than one week, all appearance or sensation of disease had disappeared, as if by magic. I leave for home to-day, and make this voluntary statement, believing that too much cannot be said in regard to the wonderful effects of the waters here. Very truly yours,

N. W. WARD,

A CHAPTER ON COUNTER IRRITANT.

"My name is Max Mayer, sir, an unattached satellite of the press. I am traveling through your country engaged in a work of philanthrophy. But sometimes I feel that I am a poor poilanthropist. I see and hear things occasionally which stir up my blood. I saw a man this morning on the K. P. railroad who riled me; yes riled me, sir. Excuse the vulgarism, but one cannot stand everything."

"What did the individual do to offend you, Mr. Mayer?" said the reporter.

"He offended me by existing. Did you ever see a man who in his very person was offensive? This man was one of them. He walked and talked like one who was so great that Jim Blaine's overcoat wouldn't make him a vest. He irritated me. I wanted to kick him and would have done so if a gentleman could stoop to such practices and not be soiled. He affected me as a red rag does a bull. Josh Billings once swore in the extremity of his soul, 'durn a fly.' I felt like adding force to the humoaist's expression and apply it to this man. Although a mere fly on the Corliss engine wheel, as it were, he swung on enough self importance to impress the casual observer with the belief that he was wheel, engine and all. I admire downright solid merit and worth, but detest, abominate and despise the ostentatious swagger of Lilliputian substance. Unfortunately there are too many of such animals at large in our country. The fool-killer is not half doing his duty.

As soon as I landed here I availed the well-known principal of counter irritant to sooth my blood. I bathed my temples in St. Jacobs Oil, sir, and here I am all right and able to talk calmly. That is a wonderful substance, sir. I mean the Great German Remedy. It will cure rheumatism, sprain or bruise, and is unsurpassed for a burn. Mr. F Edgar Etter, clerk at the Henry House, was telling me to-day that it is quite astonishing to note the evidences of popularity which crop out in regard to this Oil. He says that guests in the house frequently tell him it is the best thing in the world for rheumatism, swellings from rheumatic pains, etc. Scarcely a day passes that some one stopping in the house fails to sing the praise of St. Jacobs Oil. There, sir, is evidence of genuine merit, and it soothes one to hear of it.

While in Mr. G. Northcraft's drug store to-day I was told that a gentleman named Jones, who resides near his town believes that St. Jacobs Oil is possessed of merit which entitles it to rank as the first pain annihilator of the age. His daughter was afflicted with rheumatism. All effort to relieve her proved futile—all remedies failed. The patient suffered everything but death. She was finally cured by St. Jacobs Oil, sir, and her father came to tell the druggist of her wonderful restoration.

Then there is another case in your town, sir, that of Mrs. Mary A. Barnes, who has long suffered with rheumatism. I think she lived through a whole year without relief, although she used remedies all the time. Her druggist recommended St. Jacobs Oil. The lady bought a bottle of it and has since been using it. She experienced wonderful relief, and claims that she will soon be beyond all fear of a return of this awful malady."

THE COUNTRYMAN IN THE Weather Signal Office.

Mr. Jeremiah Toadvine, of the rural district, brought a letter of introduction to the United States Signal Officer, and by the latter gentleman was shown the beautiful scientific instruments for measuring and determining the various changes and conditions of the weather. Pointing to the standard thermometer he explained to Mr. T. the uses of the heat gauge, whereupon Mr. T. anxiously inquired if he "hadn't nuther un to spare—sich a nice merchine to sot the weather in hayin' and harvest time." His inspection of the aerometer or wind measurer evoked the expression: "Wouldn't she be the racket to run the wind mill with." The barometer was one too many for Toadvine, and, looking queerly at the official, as if he were utterly nonplussed and bankrupt of words, said: "Friend, did you ever have the reumatis?" The abruptness of the question surprised the officer, who replied, "No—never." "What"—— Evidently recollecting himself, Mr. T. stopped on the ragged edge of the threadbare remark, and said: "I only wanted to know, for if this trap (pointing to the barometer) shows the good an' bad weather afore it's time, it would be a bully trap for people with reumatis; they could thank it every time. Up my country when folks has it they use ST. JACOBS OIL an' it's a powerful argyment agin reumatis—it's the upper dorg in the fight every time." With thanks for the unexpected information, the official politely turned Mr. Toadvine over to the usher to show him to the street car, while he, looking over his paper, read: "MRS. T. A. GIST, No. 1304 Walnut street, Philadelphia, Pa., writes: I had inflammatory rheumatism very badly. In one foot and ankle it seemed to have taken hold with the determination to stay, and the morning I obtained the ST. JACOBS OIL I could not put my foot down to the floor, even for an instant. I used it that evening for the first time, and the next morning for the second time, and that afternoon put my foot down for several minutes. On the Sunday following I could stand up and walk a few steps. On Tuesday could walk about my room and went down stairs by holding on to the banisters. Now I can walk quite well and there is very little pain left. Just think! one bottle and a half, and I am almost free from pain! It is a wonderful medicine

The Century.

LEEING FROM A FORTUNE.

The sun rose propitiously bright on race Sylvester's wedding morn; the r was balmy, the sky blue, and all ture seemed in sympathy with the ppy day.

Presently a stir awoke in the house-ld, that soon swelled into a murmur consternation. The bride was miss-g. Some one had gone to her cham-r to awaken her and found it empty. mmediately a search was instituted, hich proved fruitless. The bride-oom was sent for, but he could offer explanation; like the parents, he was stracted with anxiety.

Grace Sylvester was a proud, impul-ve girl, with a warm heart and impet-us temper. She was an only child, d somewhat spoiled, as was natural; t nothing that could be imagined or duced could account for this unheard- freak; she had not even fastened a te on the toilet-cushion, as a key to e mystery, after the custom of hero-es.

For a week previous to this now un-cky day, the Sylvester mansion had ntinuously opened its hospitable por-ls to arriving guests. Friends and lations of Mr. Frank Howard, the ex-ectant bridegroom, crowded to do nor to the occasion, which the Syl-ester connection were not less eager to bellish with their presence.

This singular occurrence, therefore, uld not possibly be preserved a secret, d the chagrined and distracted host d hostess had all the added misery of nowing that their daughter's inexpli-ble flight was the subject of all sorts surmises and discussions by those ho in set phrase endeavored to condole ith them, and at the same time hint at sanity as the only solution of such an precedented freak.

But a special gleam was soon destined illume the darkness. Grace had not en unmindful of her dear parents, nor r devoted lover. A letter addressed the former had been dropped by her the postoffice. It was brief, and evi-ntly written under the pressure of citement; but, even in its fragmentary ste, Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester could ace their daughter's tenderness; and r lover, despite the undisputed mys-ry of its tone, took consolation from it.

Its contents may be rendered thus:

She had left of her own free will and accompanied, though she admitted at she would be met at her journey's d by a worthy guardian, in whose care e would remain, and who, at the ex-iration of a week, would bring her ome again; until then, she begged ey would wait for her explanation, d above all forgive any pain or annoy-nce her hasty disappearance had used.

This epistle, though gratefully re-ived, since it assured them of her fety, was not, of course, entirely satis-ctory to her parents and lover.

Despite her promise to return, they uld not remain quiet till the expira-ion of the time named, but sought her n every conceivable place; but, as was vident from the security of her retreat, race did not mean to be found till af-er the interval she had named.

One by one, or in small parties, as hey had come, the wedding guests de-parted. They carried to their own ouses a charmingly inexhaustible theme or gossip and wonderment. Every one held a separate solution and theory, and the subject promised to be one of unusual variety and entertainment.

But only one of them possessed any clew to the truth—and she, shy, insidious plotter that she was, had laid a train whose success promised even beyond her hopes. She watched its development in silence. It was not her one to speak but to await the fulfillment of her design, and so she lingered, professing the intensest sympathy for all, and at the same time contriving to bestow the most of it on Frank Howard, her distant cousin.

This young lady, May Prescott by name, had long been hopelessly in love with her Cousin Frank. She knew that his heart was devoted to another, but had never had an opportunity of seeing her rival till the generous and unsuspecting Grace, wishing to give both her and Frank pleasure, had asked her by letter to be one of her bridesmaids.

May's darling object was then gained. She had unlimited faith in her own power of creating discord, and had secretly resolved to separate the lovers and win Frank for herself, even at the eleventh hour.

Her first interview with Grace convinced her that ardent and impulsive generosity was the strong point of her character. On this she acted.

"How oddly the gifts of fate are distributed!" said she, with a sigh, as they were talking together the night before the wedding. "One would think it was enough to get a beautiful wife, without grasping at a great fortune, too; but then Frank always had a keen eye for the main chance."

Grace's face flushed a deep, indignant crimson; her full, bright eyes flashed with sudden anger as she looked at May Prescott steadily.

"Pray explain yourself, Miss Prescott," she said. "I do not understand you in the least."

"What! have you never heard of the will of Frank's eccentric old Uncle Paul? But I am sorry; perhaps I have done wrong in mentioning it. No doubt he meant to deceive you—no, no! I don't mean that—I mean perhaps he did not wish you to know."

She affected to be overcome with confusion at her own inadvertence, and pretended to regret having said so much. Grace quietly but firmly demanded to know all.

"You have said too much to recede!" she exclaimed. "Tell me all there is to tell."

This was just the opportunity May desired. She arose to see that the door was closed; then, satisfied that she and Grace were alone together, she poured into her victim's ear the story whose result was Grace's flight from home.

The week passed anxiously enough to the three people who were awaiting the wayward bride's return. The appointed day came, and early in the morning a carriage stopped before the Sylvester mansion, and Grace alighted from it, followed by an old nurse, of whom she had always been fond, and whose presence explained the fact that Grace had been staying in her home, not five miles away.

Grace walked into the house with an air of mingled triumph and deprecation. After the strange greetings were over Mr. Sylvester, with attempted sternness, demanded the promised explanation, and this was the story:

"The night before my wedding day I learned, from some one who thought I already knew it, that Frank was about to inherit $100,000 upon a strange condition. His uncle had died and left that amount to him, provided he married me within a year after the testator's death.

"I had never seen this uncle, but, as I learned from my informant, he had met me by chance in one of the New York hospitals, and, after taking the trouble to inquire my name, and no doubt satisfying himself of the suitability of the connection, he made up his eccentric mind that Frank should marry me or lose a large fortune in the event of disobeying his command.

"Now, though I am deeply obliged for the distinguished honor meant me by the deceased, I positively decline to be bartered away to any one at a stated price.

"It was sufficiently embarrassing to me to know that the old gentleman was attracted by a whim of mine, and mistook it for characteristic virtue. The fact is, during that winter—my first in New York—I was seized with a fancy to vary my round of pleasures by an afternoon among the sick, to whom I carried the ever-welcome gift of fruits, and it was while I was distributing these offerings that the matrimonial project occurred to Frank's uncle.

"Do you not understand, and can you not sympathize with me? Had I remained here, no explanation could have altered the case, and I should inevitably have become Frank's bride, under conditions alike painful to my love of truth and self-respect. I have always declared I would be loved for myself alone, not for qualities I did not possess, nor the money of a whimsical old gentleman."

She drew a long breath as she finished her recital, and held out her hand with her own winning frankness.

"The last week of the year expired yesterday," she said, with an unmistakable sparkle of triumph in her handsome eyes. "If you take me now, Frank, it must be all for love. There's no longer any money in the question."

"With all my heart!" cried the indulgent lover. "Since you have come back to me of your own free will, and have no further objections to make to our union, I consider myself one of the happiest and most fortunate of bridegrooms."

He caught Grace's pretty, unreluctant hand in his and pressed it rapturously to his lips, with a smile quite as triumphant as her own, and a glance whose intense and mischievous meaning was not explained until after the quiet wedding, at which May Prescott was the only guest, for Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester's prudence and worldly wisdom still condemned their impulsive daughter's escapade, though their partial tenderness forgave it.

"You have chosen poverty in preference to wealth," they said, "and so must be content to do without the grand wedding we had contemplated."

Grace submitted with the best humor possible; she had tested Frank's love and gained her own end, and all was bright before her inexperienced eyes.

After the wedding, Frank asked his bride:

"Are you quite satisfied with your choice of poverty, and glad that your marriage occurred to-day instead of a week ago?"

"I am perfectly delighted," Grace answered.

"Will you take a little wedding gift from me, as I have not yet presented you with one?" Frank asked, meekly.

"With pleasure," Grace answered, as she extended her hand, expecting to receive a jewel case.

But, instead of that, a ponderous legal document was produced, at which Grace gazed in blank surprise.

Then Frank explained that, despite Miss Prescott's kind interest in their affairs, the fortune was not lost, as she had made a slight mistake in dates; and his uncle's discernment in selecting so charming a wife for him had made him the happiest of men.

May Prescott's chagrin at the failure of her conspiracy, and the delight of Grace's parents at her good fortune can easily be imagined.

Grace bore her partial defeat with charming equanimity, as she was quite convinced, by some mental process of her own, that she had her husband's love. So she was reconciled to the possession of a fortune!

ALWAYS WANTED TO HEAR ST. PAUL.

A lady who was receiving applications for a vacant position in her household was waited upon by one of those wandering specimens of female humanity who manage to stay about two weeks in a place, and consider themselves family servants. "Where do you go to church?" the lady inquired. "I generally go to the same church as the family," was the reply. "Where do you attend, ma'am?" The lady replied "St. Paul's," whereupon the would be servant exclaimed, "Oh, I have always wanted to hear St. Paul prach!"

THE wealthy miser lives as a poor man here, but he must give account as a rich man in the day of judgment.

NOT ON THAT BASIS.

How vain and conceited is the country publisher who imagines that an advance circus-agent doesn't know pretty near what his circulation is! And how foolish and reckless that same agent would be to pretend that he knew anything about it. In days gone by, when Joe Warner, Michigan's genial circus manager, was on the road as agent, he had the softest, sweetest way of approaching a publisher that was ever shown in the State. He knew within a dozen copies of what the circulation of each paper was, and he also knew what a three-column "ad" in this or that sheet would be worth to his show. One day he entered a weekly newspaper office in Eaton county, shook hands all around, threw down half a dozen cigars and inquired:

"Has your circulation increased since last year?"

"Oh, yes—greatly increased."

"Are you printing double what you were last year?"

"Well—ahem—well, I think we are."

"Shall we contract on the basis of 3,000 circulation?"

"Yes, I think we'd better. We may run a few under or over, that's about the average."

Warner knew that the honest figures were about 650, but he took out a contract, filled in some of the blanks, and said:

"I shall have to look at your mail list. If you go over 3,000 I must allow you for a circulation of 4,000."

"Oh, never mind that; 3,000 will do."

"But my orders compel me to look at your list."

"Yes—well—yes," stammered the publisher, as he hunted around among his exchanges.

"Say, Warner."

"Well?"

"I guess you needn't make the contract on the basis of 3,000 circulation, but rather on increased influence among people who like to see a good show. It's too much trouble to find the lists!"

"Then I must write in here that you have a circulation of 1,000 copies."

"All right."

"And the price will be the same as last year?"

"Yes, I suppose so; but I'll be hanged if I don't circulate plump 6,000 copies on the next patent-medicine man to make up for it!"—Detroit Free Press.

HARD ON THE MINSTRELS.

I hev bin axed, began Brother Gardner, of the Lime Kiln Club, what relashun de negro minstrel troupe b'ars to de cull'd race. To return an off-hand answer, I should say dat it b'ars about the same relashun dat a hasty puddin' does to a $10,000 paintin'. If dar' am any relashun whatever, I hev neber bin able to diskiver it. De cull'd man may dance an' sing, but he nebber trabbles on his ignorance, nor on de jokes an' gags of de pas' ginerashun. If twenty cull'd men should put on wigs an' paint up to resemble twenty white men, an' sot down befo' de public an' ask why an elephant was like a gimlet, an' what was de difference between a clam on de sand and a sand on de clam, dey would be hooted off de stage. Yet de public will see white men disguise deirselves as negroes, an' applaud de gags, an' jokes, an' conundrums dat de poorest African in Detroit would be ashamed to acknowledge. If de public hankers fur sich shows, an' must hev 'em, let 'em go on, but doan' let white folks deceive deirselves, or be deceived. Continer to call 'em negro minstrel shows, but doan look fur de negro in 'em. He ain't dar. He's home in de busum of his family, warmin' his feet, learnin' de chillen' to read, an' tellen' de ole woman dat all flesh am grass.

A BICKERING pair of Quakers were heard in controversy, the husband exclaiming: "I am determined to have one quiet week with thee!" "But how wilt thou be able to get it?" said the taunting spouse, in that sort of reiteration which married ladies so provokingly indulge in. "I will keep thee a week after thou art dead," was the Quaker's rejoinder.

THE failure of Mr. Thomas Hughes' Rugby colony is announced by the Rugbeian, which says that the venture was a "fiasco almost before the echoes of applause over its beginning had died away." MORPHOMANIA.

A New Horror Inadvertently Created by Science.

[From the London Truth.]

When physicians discovered that pain could be subdued by inserting under the skin a small pointed instrument provided with a little tube containing morphia, they little thought that they were paving the way for a new vice. Yet so it was. There are, in our merry England, beings who are as wholly under the domination of morphia as ever were Chinese under that of opium. Women have yielded by degrees to its fatal fascination, until at last they prick the skin a dozen times a day with the tiny syringe that has such terrible results. The operation is almost painless; the immediate effects pleasant. A delicious languor supervenes. Happy thoughts and bright imaginations fill the mind. Some see beautiful visions, others feel only a pervading sensation of comfort and well-being. On a few the effect of morphia is to excite to some intellectual effort, if effort that can be called, which is pure delight, a glorious feeling of untrammeled power or uncrippled exercise of the highest faculties. It is as though the mind had suddenly developed wings. But at the very height of the enchantment the influence of morphia begins to subside. The glory fades. The wings trail, and the feet that are their sorry substitutes become weighted as with lead. As with the workers, so with the dreamers. The visions are obscured. The sensation of comfort gives place to one of discomfort, irritation, even pain. The mental vision that had just now looked through a rosy mist sees all things as through a crape veil or a November fog. Can it be wondered at that the dose is renewed, that the poison is absorbed again and again, that the intervals become shorter and shorter between the reign of the potent drug?

And the end? The punishment is terrible indeed. By degrees the mind becomes darkened. Hideous hallucinations seize upon it. Self-control is lost. Imbecility overtakes the weak. Madness threatens the strong.

These are the personal consequences. There are others to be bequeathed to sons and daughters, and later generations. These can be guessed at. The new vice has not reigned sufficiently long for the world to have seen them exemplified, but a dark array of possibilities suggests itself only too readily. The heritage of insanity, of inebriety, of imbecility, with its future to be traced back to those tiny tubes which hold a drop or two, and to which men looked as to a blessed means of relieving pain, forgetting that blessings and curses go hand in hand in a crooked world. Dipsomania has now a powerful rival, speedier in its results than its own revolting process, and, eventually, as degrading. The name of the latter born sister fiend is Morphomania.

INCOME OF THE MORMON CHURCH.

Wagons loaded with the various products of Utah industries are constantly passing through the gate into the tithing house in Salt Lake. The Mormon law requires that one-tenth of all the things produced by the labor of the faithful shall be given to the church, and the compliance is, in the main, honest, though attempts at shirking are occasionally detected.

The annual income from this source is kept a secret by the rulers, but has been estimated as high as $5,000,000, and undoubtedly reaches $3,000,000.

"It is thought by the Gentiles," says a correspondent of the Boston Herald, "and intimated by the saints themselves, that a portion of the tithing fund has been employed, and very effectively, in securing favorable legislation in the national Congress. The departed Brigham was wont to speak very contemptuously of Congress, boasting that he cared nothing for it, because he could influence its votes with money whenever he deemed it desirable. And there is reason to think that his boast was not wholly idle."

BURNING OF THEATERS.

It is on record in Germany that in the past 272 years now fewer than 523 theaters have been burned down in various parts of the world. This is an average of nearly two per year. During the past century there was a large increase in the percentage over the preceding time. For the hundred years the total number was 400, or more than four-fifths of the total for the 272 years. For the period included between 1771 and 1828 the average was thirteen per annum.

"On closer observation, I perceive that I am," the bandit answered, and disappeared in the wood.

A meeting of citizens was called in Montgomery, on last Wednesday evening, to give aid and encouragement to the building of the St. Louis, Montgomery and Florida railroad, from Florence, on the Tennessee river, via Jasper, Woodstock, Briarfield and Prattville to Montgomery and thence to Chattahoochie, Fla. This road would pass through the centre of Chilton county, and though we are not in need of railroad facilities, other sections of the proposed route are in such need, and very much so; and when we think of the benefits to be derived from railroads penetrating every section of the State, we say let them gridiron Alabama and Chilton county with railroads, and the people will have no cause to regret it. We hope that this meeting on the part of Montgomery's citizens will result in measures being taken to construct said road without delay.

The Press Gang.

The meeting of the Alabama Press Association in Montgomery. last week, together with a visit which the Association made to Prattville, will long be remembered by those of the press brotherhood who attended.

At Montgomery it was our individual good fortune to fall into the hands of one of her most hospitable citizens, the fairer portion of whose interesting family contributed still greater to our enjoyment of the (to us) happy occasion. At Prattville, that beautiful little city gave the entire Association a welcome that could not have been surpassed. The visit to Prattville will long be remembered by the press gang, and especially by those who were so fortunate as to be the recipients of boquets from some of her fair denizens, "with the wish that we should urge the building of a railroad to their little city." Would that it could be built at once; and we trust that it may not be long ere Prattville will be gladdened with the whistle of the iron horse.

To the courtesy of Capts. Quill and O'Bannon, of that elegant steamer, the Mary, were we indebted for the delightful excursion down the Alabama to Washington, where we were met and taken in charge by the citizens of Prattville, and conveyed thence in vehicles. A number of the capital city's lovely young ladies did much to grace and lend enchantment to the trip by accompanying us hither.

About fifty editors and publishers attended the meeting of the Association. Talented Tom Baine, of the Hayneville Examiner, was along with his jokes. Handsome Frank Glass and ugly Steve Nunnelee were there. The fearfully wild Irishman of the Blount County News made us wince with the grasp he gave our paw; he was accompanied by his extremely timid colleague, Mr. Ketchum, whom he calls his "cub." The handsomest man in all the world, Bro. Hensley Grubbs, of the Decatur News, was there, as was also "pert Will Willoughby," of the Birmingham Observer, of whom, in the language of Bunthorne, it might be said that he is:

"An Associated Press young man,
A Prattville excursion young man,
He likes the editors
But pities their creditors,
A newsy newspaper young man."

Rev. J. C. Burrus, a chaplain of the Universalist "gender," was in the gang. He edits the Universalist Herald at Notasulga. It is said that his town was orgiually known by the more euphonious name of "Not-so-ugly," but when the reverend gentleman made it his headquarters, the citizens of the place, acting upon the maxim that "consistency's a jewel," were forced to change its name.

Would that we had space to mention all of the "great ink-slingers" who were present. But as we have not, we will hope that ere they meet next year in Selma, they may each be rich enough to buy out Jay Gould and build a railroad to Prattville.

AVENGING JESSE JAMES.

Frank James Organizing a Gang of Desperadoes with Murderous Intent.

ATCHISON, Kan., April 17.—Your correspondent has come into the knowledge of facts which positively established the theory that Frank James is at the head of a movement which has for its aim the extermination of all whose names are associated with the death of his brother Jesse. Frank passed through Atchison on Friday, going southwest, having four people with him. On the same day Mrs. Jesse James went to Kansas City.

Yesterday Frank returned from a mysterious visit followed by the same pals. My informant states that the gang of which Frank James will now take the lead is taken from that section of the country in the Missouri bottoms opposite here which produced Polk Wells, Bill Norris, Jim Dougherty, John Pomfrey, and many others, composed of the same class and material, having for its purpose the avenging of the death of Jesse James and other lawless deeds. To this gang will be added a few tried mountain outlaws whom Frank James picked up during a residence for some time in New Mexico in a small sheepranch.

Robert and Charles Ford are never to enjoy a moment's peace, no matter what the advice or assurance from Gov. Crittenden. These brothers begin where Jesse James left off. They will be hunted and hounded as persistently as he was. Were the reward they are supposed to obtain twenty times $50,000, it will not purchase one day's rest, one peaceful meal, or blessed night. These boys are not alone to be removed, but all informants and witnesses in Cracker Neck.

From the State Index it is learned that Gen. James E. Slaughter, recently appointed postmaster at Mobile, is to be the conservative candidate for Governor. The Index also says that Gen. Slaughter fought the last battle of the war with 300 men against the enemy's 1,500, and killed 500 of them. It is a great pity General Slaughter should have gone back on such a record. It is impossible to tell whether the Index speaks by authority, but no one would be sorry if such were the case. Gen. Slaughter would be as easy to beat as any conservative Radical or radical Conservative, in the State. By what authority, though, does the Index appropriate the name conservative?—Mont. Advertiser.

TUSKALOOSA.

Notes of the Old Capital—The Druid City and Its People Fifty Years Ago.

NUMBER TWO.

Of the various corps of scholastic work at the University from 1836 to 1840, I may mention Dr. Alva Woods, the able President, and Prof. Henry Tutwiler, whose amiable modesty and fine classical attainments were a proverb.

Mr. Williams' school "The Institute," was remarkable for elegance of appointment and finish. It excluded young gentlemen visiters, except from seven to nine o'clock Saturday evening. The college boys called it the "the convent." Mr. Williams was amusingly polite. Miss Brooks was the glory of the corps of instruction. My first recollection of calisthenics dates back to that school. The boys called it the "Presbyterian dance." I must not omit the famous grammar school man, Mr. Price. He advertised his school, afterwards the old Baptist Church, as the "Thrashing Machine;" and many an urchin found out what that meant, before he could learn to parse a tabulated Greek verb.

The preachers, Dr. Daniel Baker, lion-faced, lion-voiced, terribly earnest and impressive; Dr. W. A. Scott, a walking encyclopedia, whose sermons were sometimes half quotation from authors of every age, strung together by rough paragraphs of his own, of husky voice and elephantine movement, who, however, always held his hearers charmed and chained at pleasure; occasionally the suave Mr. Williams, were heard at the Presbyterian Church. Dr. Robert Kennon, whose common senso was the most extraordinary one ever knew, Dr. Hamilton, late deceased, and sometimes the late fervent, glowing, impetuous, Dr. E. V. Levert, at the Methodist Church. "Mr. Knapp," as his people loved to call him, gentle and winning as a woman, at the Episcopal. The young, ardent, eloquent, peculiar DeVotie; Dr. Manly, a Chrysostom, Jeremy Taylor, and Leighton, combined; sometimes the sparkling, nestling Baptist, or the glowing, soaring, inimitable Bestor, at the Baptist. Never have I known such a company of men elsewhere.

But the people generally were far from being a very religious people. Gamblers, for a time, were numerous Some of them were admitted into good society. Street tragedies sometimes occurred. One of these, I think, was the turning point of the times. A party connected, renouncing the perilous business of gaming, and becoming a long-known and valuable citizen.

The Legislature was not an exemplary body, as for the most part, now-a-days. One who remembers a half-century, is impressed with the improvement of public morals. We were a little surprised at the vote of Tuskaloosa county on the prohibition question; but the dear old place will right up on that subject.

The University was "a hard place," from '36 to '38; but revolutionized, by a great religious movement, in the fall of that year, became a model institution.

NOTICE.

A mass meeting of the Democracy of Chilton will be held at the Court House in Clanton, on Wednesday, the 3d day of May next, for the purpose of appointing delegates to the State Convention to be held at Montgomery on the 7th day of June next, and for transacting such other business as may come before it. I. D. LANIER, Chairman Ex. Committee.

At the Montgomery Music Bazar we were shown last week, one of the best inventions of the day. It is an organette which plays without keys, and is so arranged that it requires no previous musical instruction to play it. It is the instrument for lodges and Sunday schools, where a musician may not be found. Its workings are easily explained, and Mr. Child is always ready to exhibit it to visitors.

Dr. Lanier's drug store was entered by burglars one night last week, and about $25 worth of goods were carried off by them. From circumstances it seems, that the same persons broke into the store of Mr. C. H. Smith, at Jemison, where they succeeded in getting away with about $50 worth of goods. They left a quantity of tobacco in Mr. Smith's store, a specimen of which was sent to Dr. Lanier, and he recognized it as a part of that stolen from him.

Calera News.

Mr. J. D. Hardy has returned from a visit to his former home, in the State of New York, and brought several families who will make Calera their home in future. I think we ought to urge Mr. Hardy to go north again and bring a few more, as Yankee energy is what our southern country needs.

Rev. J. C. Burrus, of Notasulga, preached in Calera, last Sunday. Persons were present from Jemison, Longview and Montevallo. We understand he is to preach in Jemison next Sunday.

The carpenter work has been finished on the Breazeale hotel and the plasterers and painters are at work. Captain Breazeale has received his gas generator and will put that in position this week.

Mr. David Adams, at Calera, has two acres in fine pears from which he expects to gather three or four hundred bushels this year. Heretofore Mr. Adams has been unable to supply the demand at one dollar a peck in the orchard.

They tell us our friend Solomon will soon commit matrimony. we can't say whether this is so or not but one thing we do know and that is there is no better man than old Solomon.

Mr. N. B. Dare, is building a new saw mill two miles north of Calera.

The following lawyers were in attendance, viz: Henry Wilson, John Garner and W. W. Shortridge of Montevallo, and J. S. Edwards and W. E. Johnson, of Clanton. Sorry that the Hon. The following resolutions were reported by the committee and unanimously adopted by the Association on Saturday last:

1. Resolved, That the thanks of the members of the Alabama Press Association are due and are hereby cordially tendered the Memphis and Charleston, the Selma, Rome and Dalton, the Alabama Central, the Western, Montgomery and Mobile, Montgomery and Eufaula, and Mobile and Girard Railroad Companies for highly appreciated courtesies extended them in attending the present session, and to Prof. G. F. McDonald for the use of his splended new Opera House and for courteous attentions shown them during the session.

2. Resolved, That to Captains Quill and O'Bannon we are profoundly grateful for the pleasant excursion so highly enjoyed by us, upon the Alabama river to Old Washington and back in their elegant and commodious steamer—the beautiful Mary—and assure them we most highly appreciate the courtesy extended us, not only while on board, but in giving us the opportunity of paying a delightful visit of several hours to the hospitable people of Pratville.

3. Resolved, That we shall ever hold in pleasing remembrance our visit to Pratville, and the courtesies received at the hands of its hospitable people—and gratefully acknowledge ourselves especially indebted to Col. and Mrs. Merrell E. Pratt for their more than successful efforts to make our gala day at Pratville every way enjoyable and always to be pleasantly remembered by us.

4. Resolved, That we sympathize with our fellow-citizens of Prattville in their isolation from its highways of trade and commerce, but the same enterprise which converted an unsightly marsh into a beautiful village lawn, and made Autauga creek the driving power of the factory that turns out the finest gins known to the cotton producing world, can and will lay the track for the iron horse and open up the way for his daily visits in the near future to their beautiful town.

5. Resolved, That we feel deeply indebted to the many citizens of Montgomery whose courtesies during our stay are highly appreciated and shall not be forgotten.

6. Resolved, That we are deeply indebted to our distinguished ex-President, Hon. W. W. Screws, for much of the pleasure we have enjoyed during this annual reunion, resulting from the generous plans devised and put into execution by him for our entertainment, and we hereby tender him the assurance of our high appreciation of his efforts in this behalf, and of his entire success in the premises.

7. Resolved, That the Secretaay of this Association be and is hereby instructed to send a copy of the foregoing resolutions to each of the corporations and persons mentioned therein, and that the newspapers represented be requested to publish the same.

Newspaper Duns.

Here is how a brother journalist puts it: We presume that some people think newspaper men are persistent duns; let a farmer place himself in a similar position, and see if he would not do the same.

Suppose that he raises one thousand bushels of corn, and his neighbor should come and buy a bushel, and the price was only a small sum of one dollar, or less, and the neighbor says, "I will pay you the amount in a few days" As the farmer does not want to be small about the matter, he says, "All right."

Another comes in the same way, until the whole of one thousand bushels of corn are trusted out to one thousand different persons and not one of the purchasers concerns himself about it, for it is a small amount they owe the farmer, and of course that will not help him any.

He does not realize that the farmer has frittered away his large crop of corn, and that its value is due in a thousand little driblets, and that he is seriously embarrassed in his business because his debtors treat it as a little matter. But if all would pay him promptly, which they could do as well as not, it would be a very large amount to the farmer, and enable him to carry on his business without difficulty. The above comparison is too true of the difficulties that the newspaper man has to contend with

WHAT OF THAT?

Tired! Well, what of that?
Didst fancy life was spent on beds of ease,
Fluttering the rose leaves scattered by the breeze?
Come, rouse thee! work while it is called to-day!
Coward, arise! go forth upon thy way!

Lonely? And what of that?
Some must be lonely! 'tis not given to all
To feel a heart responsive rise and fall,
To blend another life into its own.
Work may be done in loneliness. Work on.

Dark! Well, what of that?
Didst fondly dream the sun would never set?
Dost fear to lose the way? Take courage yet!
Learn thou to walk by faith, and not by sight;
Thy steps will guided be, and guided right.

Hard! Well, what of that?
Didst fancy life one summer holiday,
With lessons none to learn, and naught but play?
Go, get thee to thy task! Conquer or die!
It must be learned! Learn it, then, patiently.

No help! Nay 'tis not so!
Though human help be far, thy God is nigh,
Who feeds the ravens, hears his children cry,
He's near thee, wheresoe'er thy footsteps roam;
And he will guide thee, light thee, help thee home.

The New Secretary.

Have you seen our Billy Chandler?
How he clambers up the mast?
How he skips among the top-sails
And defies the ripping blast?

When he thinks of Richard Thompson,
Billy Chandler laughs in scorn.
See him stride the poop! those sea-legs
Speak him to the ocean born!

When the tempests wild are raging,
O 'tis then that Billy looms!
"Split the jib and saw the yard-arm?"
It is Billy's tone that booms.

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
AND SPERMATORRHŒA.

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

(Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlet giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by)

ASTRONOMICAL PROGRESS.

Like the sand of the sea, the stars of heaven have ever been used as effective symbols of number, and the improvements in the method of our observation have added fresh force to our original impressions. We now know that our earth is but a fraction of one out of at least 75,000,000 worlds. But this is not all. In addition to the luminous heavenly bodies, we can not doubt that there are countless others, invisible to us from their greater distance, smaller size, or feebler light; indeed, we know that there are many dark bodies which now emit no light, or comparatively little. Thus, in the case of Procyon, the existence of an invisible body is proved by the movement of the visible star. Again, I may refer to the curious phenomena presented by Algol, a bright star in the head of Medusa. This star shines without change for two days and thirteen hours; then, in three hours and a half, dwindles from a star of the second to one of the fourth magnitude; and then, in another three and a half hours, reassumes its original brilliancy. These changes seem certainly to indicate the presence of an opaque body, which intercepts at regular intervals a part of the light emitted by Algol.

Thus the floor of heaven is not only "thick inlaid with patines of bright gold," but studded also with extinct stars; once, probably, as brilliant as our own sun, but now dead and cold, as Helmholtz tells us that our own sun will be, some 17,000,000 years hence.

The connection of astronomy with the history of our planet has been a subject of speculations and research during a great part of the half-century of our existence, Sir Charles Lyell devoted some of the opening chapters of his great work to the subject. Haughton has brought his powers to bear on the subject of secular changes in climate, and Croll's contributions to the same subject are of great interest. Last, but not least, I must not omit to make mention of the series of massive memories (I am happy to say, not yet nearly terminated) by George Darwin on tidal friction, and the influence of tidal action on the evolution of the solar system. I may perhaps, just mention, as regards telescopes, that the largest reflector, in 1830, was Sir W. Herschel's, of four feet; the largest at present being Lord Rosse's, of six feet; as regards refractors the largest then had a diameter of eleven and a quarter inches, while your fellow-townsman, Cooke, carried the size to twenty-five inches, and Mr. Grubb, of Dublin, has just successfully completed one of twenty-seven inches for the observatory of Vienna. It is remarkable that the two largest telescopes in the world should both be Irish.—Popular Science Monthly.

A GAME OF POKER IN KANSAS.

Two bloods of Salina, Kan., were rivals in love, and decided upon a duel to settle the question of possession. They selected their seconds, got a surgeon and retired to a sequestered nook, where they spread a blanket and the deadly work began. At the first deal one of the rivals got two pairs, jacks and deuces, and failed to fill. His rival showed up four kings and took the queen. The surgeon got $10, the seconds got disgusted and the loser got drunk, while the winner got married.—Kansas City Times.

A HUMAN BAROMETER.

The Real Relation Between the Human Body and the Weather Scientifically Explained.

[Scientific American.]

One of the most valuable developments of modern science along the line of human necessity is the National Weather Bureau at Washington. Experience has shown that eighty-six per cent. of the predictions of the signal service are accurate; and these predictions are unquestionably of the greatest advantage to the seaman, the agriculturist and the entire commercial world. The service has proven its necessity by its usefulness, for in past times the facilities for foretelling atmospheric changes were meagre indeed. The only indications our fathers had of coming changes in the weather were aching limbs, twinging joints or painful corns. These "indications," though crude, were usually correct, and hence naturally suggest the inquiry as to the relation between the human system and the weather. The body is unquestionably an excellent barometer. It foretells changes in the atmosphere long before they occur, and this fact has been taken advantage of by physicians who, when all other agencies fail, prescribe a change of air, thus hoping the body may find an atmospheric condition better suited to its needs. And yet the real relation between the human body and the weather has never been fully understood, nor has there ever been, until now, a correct explanation of what rheumatism (which seems in league with the atmosphere) really is. It was originally thought by many to be a trouble in the joints, and as such was treated in the most strange, not to say ridiculous, manner. This theory became dispelled when the same trouble attacked the muscles, and the feeling then prevailed that it was purely a muscular disorder. But this idea was found to be too narrow, and now it is universally conceded that rheumatism is a blood disease. And what a terrible disease it is. It often comes without warning and prostrates the system with agony. Again its beginning is gradual, and its growth slow. In its acute form it manifests itself in every conceivable shape and always accompanied by intense pain. At one time it is inflammatory, at another neuralgic. Sometimes it assumes the form of gout, and again that of pleurisy or lumbago; but in whatever manner it appears it is terribly painful and always to be dreaded. The pain and annoyance of rheumatism are increased by its great danger for it is liable to attack the brain or heart at any moment, thereby causing instant death. Indeed, nearly every case of heart-disease with all its dreadful suddenness which has ever occurred, can be traced more or less direct to rheumatic causes. In its chronic form it stiffens the joints, contracts the muscles, undermines the health and ruins the life. It frequently attacks men and women who are apparently in perfect health. Indeed, it is as greatly to be dreaded as any possible form of physical woe.

But, however severe its effects may be, the exact cause of this blood trouble has been an undecided question, and it is only within the past year that any decision upon the subject has been reached. In order to fully determine what the cause of rheumatic disorders really was, certain authorities sent letters of inquiry from Washington to the leading practicing physicians of the land, and these inquiries were responded to quite generally, thus furnishing data of great value to science and mankind. The views held by the doctors are of a varied nature, but so overwhelming a proportion hold to one belief as to leave but little doubt that it is the correct one. This belief, briefly stated, is that uric acid in the blood causes rheumatism, and that it is only by removing this poisonous acid that rheumatic or neuralgic troubles in all their terrible forms can be cured. This being true, the important question arises: "How does this poisonous uric acid get into the blood, and how can it be removed?" Uric acid is a waste material of the body which the kidneys should carry out, but because they are weakened they cannot throw it from the system. Restore the kidneys and you restore the power that will force the uric acid from the system and thus banish the rheumatic agonies which it causes. This is reason; it is science. No one whose kidneys are in a perfect condition was ever troubled with rheumatism, and no rheumatic sufferer, however slight the pain may be, has perfect kidneys. The conclusion of this truth is inevitable: perfect kidneys means freedom from rheumatism.

When rheumatism has manifested itself in any special part of the body, attempts have usually been made to treat that part of the body. As a result, the pain has departed but the disease has remained, lying subtly concealed and ready to break out at some unexpected moment. Checking the pain in any single locality only scatters the disease through the system, when, if the seat of the disorder, which are the kidneys, were reached, a complete cure would be the result. The way, therefore, to expel this rank and poisonous acid before it assumes an inflammatory or chronic form is by keeping the kidneys in absolute health. This is no easy thing to do, and no means has, until within the past few years, been known which would successfully reach and affect these great organs. At last, however, scientists have discovered that the leaves of a tropical plant, previously but little known to science and unknown to medicine, possessed marvelous qualities adapted for the kidneys. These leaves have been skillfully combined in the remedy now known as Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure. It is, up to the present time, the only known preparation that acts so directly upon the kidneys as to effectually cure the various dangerous forms of kidney disease, and hence remove all uric acid from the blood. As a result, the cures it has been the means of performing, are really very remarkable. Indeed, there are thousands of persons in America to-day who owe their restoration to health and entire freedom from rheumatism to this simple yet powerful remedy, which is known universally, manufactured in Rochester, N. Y. and sold in every drug store in the land.

From the doctors in the various cities of the United States who have certified over their own signatures to the scientific statement that uric acid in the blood is the cause of rheumatism, are a large number of Chicago and St. Louis physicians, among them being Dr. Adolph Uhlemeyer, Dr. Wm. Webb, Dr. John M. Frank, Dr. Edwin T. Webster, Dr. Benjamin F. Whitmore, Dr. William T. Richardson, Dr. Robert T. Atkinson, Dr. Thos. F. Humbold, Dr. William M. McPheeters, Dr. William Johnson, Dr. Isaac N. Love, Dr. Clark Whittier, Dr. J. T. Hodgen, Dr. Thomas F. Dunigan, Dr. Nicholas Guhman, Dr. Antonio Prietta, Dr. Charles H. Goodman, Dr. Daniel Kuhn, Dr. Henry Newland, Dr. William S. Wortman, Dr. George T. Pitzer, Dr. Henry F. Ahlbrandt, Dr. Elijah T. Frazier, Dr. Carl Spinzig, Dr. David R. Martin, Dr. Benjamin R. Taylor, Dr. James L. Logan, Dr. A. Heacock, Dr. Henry Kirchner, Dr. John J. Kane, Dr. Henry F. W. Kruse, Dr. William C. Glasgow, Dr. Jeremiah S. B. Alleyne, Dr. Thomas S. Comstock, Dr. Charles H. Hughes, Dr. Frederick Kolbenheyer, Dr. Joseph Heitzig, Dr. Edward A. DeCailrol, Dr. Bernard Roemer, Dr. James M. Clopton, Dr. Charles V. Ware, Dr. Alphonso Jaminet, Dr. James L. Kent, Dr. William S. Barker, Dr. Solomon C. Martin, Dr. Rudolph Studhatter, Dr. Louis P. Ehrmann, Dr. John A. King, Dr. Simeon E. Garlock, Dr. Theodore Foy, Dr. John E. Faber, Dr. Ernest F. Hoffman, Dr. Herman Nagle, Dr. Adolph Wislizenus, Dr. James L. Pirtle, Dr. Edward Rose, Dr. William H. Grayson, Dr. Hugo M. Starkloff, Dr. Robert M. Swander, Dr. William N. Brennan, Dr. Temple S. Hoyne, Dr. Lyman Ware, Dr. Chas. W. Hemstead, Dr. William J. Hawkes, Dr. T. C. Duncan, Dr. William R. Griswold, Dr. Lyman Bedford, Dr. A. B. Westcott, Dr. J. R. Bell, Dr. Charles M. Clark, Dr. W. H. Woodbury, Dr. Alfred H. Hiatt, Dr. Herman Hahn, Dr. Calvin M. Fitch and Dr. John D. M. Carr.

The theory of the doctors as above explained finds its confirmation in the fact that when the kidneys have been cured, rheumatism is completely removed. This is not, of course, always accomplished instantly, for in a disease so subtle, the cure is often very slow, but under no other plan can any hope of permanent relief ever be found. There are hundreds of cases on record during the present Winter of persons afflicted with rheumatic troubles of the worst order who have been entirely cured by following the theory above stated and using the remedy mentioned. Many of these persons had the very worst possible symptoms. Vague aches in different portions of the body were followed by agonies the most intense in some particular spot. Acute and throbbing pains succeeded each other and the coursing poisonous acid inflamed all the veins. Troubles which began with slight disorders increased to derangements the most serious. It is sad to think that all this suffering was endured when it could have been or quite relieved. Acting upon the theory and using the remedy above mentioned, the kidneys could have been restored to their usual rigor, the uric poison expelled from the system, the inflammation removed and the pain entirely banished.

These are some of the real and scientific facts regarding rheumatism, attested by the highest authority, and they are, beyond question, the only correct ones ever brought forth. We are aware they are advanced ideas, but ten years hence they will be the accepted belief and practice of the world. If people suffer from rheumatic troubles in the future and with these plain truths before them, they certainly can blame no one but themselves.

STEREOTYPED HUMOR.

It is a sad fact that American humorists, as a class, resemble precocious children. Let them do one thing at which the world laughs, and they will repeat the performance over again with a persistence and a mad hankering to please which makes justifiable homicide a relaxation as well as a duty. Stanley Huntley's "Spoopendyke Papers" were good at first, but anybody could write them now. The humor is strictly machine work, but "Mr. Spoopendyke" grinds away at his comparison mill with a fresh and breezy conviction that his un does not pall upon repetition. Mark Twain's jokes are the result of a plain, comical formula; given a man, a chair, a dark night and a tumble, and a grammar school boy could construct a witticism which Mr. Clemens would swear was his own. Bill Nye has his little receipt for humor just as George W. Peck has his, and Peck could write Nye's stuff just as Nye could write Eugene Field's, or Aleck Sweet write Josh Billings'. What we complain of is that there is no spontaneity about recent humorous writers. These amusing gentlemen would as soon think of tampering with the Lord's prayer as altering the form made or the expression of their wit. They seem to think that when they have a good thing they should stick to it. A patented style of humor may, as the country grows older, pass as an heirloom in certain families, and it would be no surprise to us, were we to revisit the pale glimpses of the moon five centuries hence, to discover a descendant of Stanley Huntly writing that all "Mrs. Spoopendyke" needed to be Eve was to add a few years to her age.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

I did so, and before the second bottle had been exhausted my arm was perfectly well."—Brooklyn Eagle.

A YOUNG man at Augusta, Me., suffering from a slight cold, had a severe fit of coughing, when suddenly he grew black in the face and fell over dead. It was found that his death was caused by œdema of the glottis; that is, in his coughing fit all the air was expelled from the lungs, and the lips of the glottis, or opening at the upper part of the windpipe, closed. There being no interior pressure the glottis could not open, and respiration was impossible.

An Open Letter.

MESSRS. ELLIS & CO.—It affords me great pleasure to make the following statement: For FOURTEEN YEARS I have been constantly suffering from chronic hæmaturia—the hemorrhage being at times very great, and at no time entirely arrested. The accompanying congestion of the kidneys frequently was acutely painful. I have had treatment by the best physicians, but their skill gave me no relief. The wide-spread celebrity of the Bailey Springs, in the cure of affections of the urinary organs, determined me to try them. I have been here two weeks and am entirely relieved. Indeed, in less than one week, all appearance or sensation of disease had disappeared as if by magic. I leave for home to-day, and make this voluntary statement, believing that too much cannot be said in regard to the wonderful effects of the waters here. Very truly yours,

N. W. WARD,

RESCUED FROM DEATH.

William J. Coughlin, of Somerville, Mass., says: "In the fall of 1876 I was taken with bleedings of the lungs, followed by a severe cough. I lost my appetite and flesh, and was confined to my bed. In 1877 I was admitted to the hospital. The doctors said I had a hole in my lung as big as half a dollar. At one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WILLIAM HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I got a bottle, when, to my surprise, I commenced to feel better, and to-day I feel better than for three years past. TORMENT, INDEED.

Life's vexations do not generally come on one like a storm descending the mountain or like a whirlwind; they come as the rain does in some sections of the world—gently, but every day. One of life's discomforts is presented herewith:

According to popular impression hot weather, mosquitoes and mad dogs all flourish at the same time and are chargeable to the malefic influence of the Dog Star. Speaking of dogs and the Dog Star reminds us of a boy's story of a dog and the comet, and which we here give in a short extract from the boy's letter: "Golly, Bob, you ought to ha been there last night to a-seen the fun. Tom Winkins' dorg Toddles was a-settin' at the gate a-gazin' at the Comit, when along comes old Sykes durned rat tarrier and the 2 waltzed over the fence and the 2 fought. The tarrier proved too much for Toddles, and afore they could haul him off the battle ground he had made a good square meal off his hide. Tom was in despair. A kind looking gentleman in a broad brim hat told him to get a bottle of ST. JACOBS OIL and rub him with it, and it would cure him in no time. What does Tom do but steal into the chapel at Vesper time and slide into Father Jacobs confessional box and beg of him a bottle of his oil with which to rub his dorg. The Father felt of Tom's head; it was hot an' afore Tom could utter a prayer, two men were luggin' him home followed by a great crowd, who kept at a safe distance, thinking he had been bit by a mad dorg. The more he kicked and screamed to be let free, the tighter they held on to him." In reference to another torment, the Chicago Western Catholic recently wrote: "Mr. Joel D. Harvey, U. S. Collector of Internal Revenue, of this city, has spent over two thousand dollars on medicine for his wife, who was suffering dreadfully from rheumatism, and without deriving any benefit whatever; yet two bottles of ST. JACOBS OIL accomplished what the most skillful medical men failed in doing. We could give the names of hundreds who have been cured by this wonderful remedy did space permit us. The latest man who has been made happy through the use of this valuable liniment is Mr. James A. Conlan, librarian of the Union Catholic Library of this city. The following is Mr. Conlan's indorsement:

UNION CATHOLIC LIBRARY ASSOCIATION,

I wish to add my testimony to the merits of ST. JACOBS OIL as a cure for rheumatism. One bottle has cured me of this troublesome disease, which gave me a great deal of bother for a long time; but, thanks to the remedy, I am cured. This statement is unsolicited by any one in its interest.

Very respectfully,
JAMES A. CONLAN, Librarian.

AT LAST.

BY JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

hen on my day of life the night is falling,
And, in the winds from unsunned spaces blown,

My feet to paths unknown.

ou who hast made my home of life so pleasant,
Leave not its tenant when its walls decay.
Love divine, O Helper ever present,
Be Thou my strength and stay!

d kindly faces to my own uplifting
The love which answers mine.

Be with me then to comfort and uphold;

Nor street of shining gold.

COL. COYOTE CLARK.

When I told the officers of my church that newest city of the Southwestern tates that Mrs. Clark had called upon e with a view of joining our society, hose officials were struck with dismay, r the Colonel had shot her former hus-and.

"I am glad to know her," I insisted.

"And you would like to have her hus-and, Coyote Clark, call, would you?" r. Jones asked it derisively, but I re-lied as promptly, "I will be glad to ave him do so! He shall be welcome. hat is what I am here for. It is the orst people who need me most."

"Do they? Well, I am anxious to ee what will come of it. Col. Coyote lark!" and Mr. Brown evidently coin-ided in the sarcastic exclamation of Mr. ones. As soon as they were gone I lanted the dreaded reprobate in imag-nation before me.

"It is plain," I said to myself, "that e is a large, red-faced, bushy-whisk-red, boisterous man, a bully and a lackguard. Doubtless the sobriquet of oyote, prairie fox, has come to and lings to him as naturally as the name f Bob, Tom, Bill to other men. I am ot afraid of the ruffian," and if my fists id not instinctively clench themselves y manner became in anticipation iron and defiant.

A few weeks afterward, and when I ad forgotten the disreputable Colonel, here called upon me one afternoon a entleman whom I knew at a glance to e a book or insurance agent. He was n undersized man, but well-formed and emarkably well-dressed, closely-shaven, nd whose singularly youthful face was ade the more engaging by a pair of rank and laughing eyes. There was that in them which grasped me as cordially as did his hand, which I observed was as small and white as that of a lady, and which adhered to my own with a curious magnetic warmth. His voice, too, and whole bearing had such an innocent and childlike sincerity as won me at once. No one could be less intrusive or more respectable, and during our conversation upon general topics I observed that he listened more attentively to me, and with more than his eyes fastened upon mine. "I will subscribe for his book, whatever it is," I murmured to myself at last. "If he is an insurance agent how can I refuse to take out a policy?" But he only remarked, as after a very pleasant visit he arose to leave, "I am pleased to know, sir, that my wife desires to unite with the church."

"Your wife," I stammered.

"Yes, sir; Mrs. Clark. My name is Col. Clark. I dare say," he added with the laugh of a school-boy, "that you have heard of me as Coyote Clark. That is only their fun. For although I am not myself a Christian, as I regret to say, no man, sir, has a deeper respect for religion," and his face had taken on the sincerest seriousness.

That was the way we began our more than mutual acquaintance. Every day I heard of some fresh rascality of my new friend. He was a gambler, was horribly profane when enraged, could become more thoroughly intoxicated over night, and show less signs of it next morning than any other. When crossed in his plans he could and did kill his man without a symptom of regret for it afterward. It is absurd to suppose that I liked him notwithstanding all this because he named a race horse after me. It was a shame, but I did like him. Like most men I was born twins, not like Chang and Eng, for mine is the innermost duality of Jacob and Esau in eternal strife, and the hidden Esau in me, shocking as it is to confess, sprang forth to greet him every time we met, as we often did. It may have been because I had so intense a desire to save the man from himself and impending doom. "He is sure to be killed in the end," I urged upon myself; "he is apt to be shot down any moment; whatever he does I will not break with him—will do my best to win him over."

He gave me every opportunity to do so. After a very long probation his wife became a member of my church. Not only was she a regular attendant, but she brought her husband with her. On prayer-meeting nights, when it was too cold or the rain was falling in torrents, whoever else was absent it was not Col. Coyote Clark nor his wife. Every child was in the Sunday school. During sermons the Colonel gave me his, if not devout, at least undivided attention. I met a cordial reception when I visited at his house. I was a little surprised when, on calling one hot August evening, two or three of his youngest children raced in and out of the parlor as naked as the hour they were born, but they were very beautiful children, and were soon hustled off to bed; and the father sat listening for an hour after, and with sympathetic eyes, to all I could urge upon him as to a change of life.

As I knew at the outset, I cannot condense into limits so brief a tenth of what I would like to say of my friend. For, notwithstanding everything, I liked him; yes, and I like him to this hour! I recall the picnic dinner he gave to the Sunday school in the woods on a bright October day, the profuse generosity of the man, then as always, who for some occult reason wore a ruffled shirt and was apparently the ideal of a refined gentleman. We had to repress and refuse his pecuniary gifts to the church. I believe he would have built us a new edifice had we allowed it.

"And you still think you can make a Christian of him?" The question was continually dashed upon me like cold water, and from, it seemed to me, every quarter. "I can but try!" I always said so, but it was with a sinking heart. My friend seemed to belong to a wholly different species somehow, always so cordial, so attentive, so open to conviction, so frankly boyish and bright-faced, yet all along, as I could but know, the same unmitigated reprobate. Disasters befell him in quick succession. His house was burned down, but he tracked the incendiary, killed him, and was as cheerful as ever. His favorite son was blown up and burned to a crisp in his Christmas pyrotechnics. Another son, a handsome fellow, accidentally shot and killed a young negro with whom he was playing. A daughter not 15 was assisted out of a back window one night by a lad not much older, and eloped to be married by me some weeks after to her abductor. A third son not 10 years old had his clothes hidden while bathing in the river, and searched and found them only to take a small revolver out of the pockets, run, still naked, after his mischievous companion and dangerously wound him. Through everything Col. Coyote Clark remained, as far as I could see, the same pleasant-faced, sincere-spoken, innocent-mannered and hopelessly wicked desperado.

"Now, is there anything I can do for you?" he reined in his horse at my gate one morning to ask, looking the picture of a cavalier, for he was Captain of the Rangers, and was off on a scout after the Indians. I made a request, but forgot all about it until, months after, he stopped on his return at my gate to give me the ox-hide quiver full of arrows, the medicine bag and bow of a Comanche. "He was a big chief," he said, "and I picked him off on purpose for you."

One morning, not long after, I saw him on the roof of a burning house helping to put out the flames at the peril of his life. The next day I heard the rapid cracking of revolvers down street. It was a little "difficulty" he was having, and I hastened past his dead enemy to find him dying on the sidewalk. His face brightened like that of a child when he saw me, and he gave me the same cordial and sympathetic attention as of old to all I had to say. I see his boyish and innocent-seeming face this moment, as smilingly unconscious of what concerned him most as a squirrel, without the faculty to care. "Anyhow, I fetched him!" he laughed—and was dead.

But why is it that I liked him so much, so very much, more than I do people so very much better? Why, oh, why is it?—Our Continent.

STATISTICS OF SUICIDE.

A Gradual Increase of Self-Murders in Recent Years.

It has been stated by a writer in a late English magazine that there has been a marked revival of suicides during the last hundred years. It is estimated that the rate has quintupled in Europe since the middle of the last century. Ninety thousand persons are said to die by their own hand each year on the Continent and the British Isles. One-fourth of these are put down as mad; the rest perform the act knowingly, with a view to some presumed advantage.

The rates vary a great deal in different countries in Europe. The figures are higher in the north (excepting only Russia) than in the south, and more people kill themselves in town than in the country. It is said that this sort of mortality is greatest among the Danes, and least among the Portuguese, the figures being as thirty-five to one.

The popular theory that people hold more and more to life as they approach its natural conclusion is contradicted by statistics, which show that grey hair brings with it, in many cases, a disgust for existence, which renders those affected by it impatient to wait till death comes to them of its own accord. Suicides are about twice as frequent above 70 as they are between 20 and 30. The number of children under 16 in the list is comparatively small, but it is growing rapidly.

Nearly 2,000 boys and girls commit self-murder each year in Europe. So far, they do not seem to begin before they are 9. That is the moment, apparently, when the ills of this world are unbearable to them, as happened to the boy who drowned himself because of grief at the death of his canary. At the age of 13, however, motives grow to be more stupendous, as was the case with a boy in France, who hanged himself at that age, after bequeathing his soul to Rousseau and his body to the earth.

The returns from all Europe prove this is a prevailing rule: That where three men kill themselves, only one woman follows their example. Instruction is said to predispose to suicide, while professions do not. A man does not kill himself because of his trade, but a good many men kill themselves because of their knowledge. Suicide is most abundant in the regions where schooling is most expanded. The inhabitants of countries in which every one can read are those who commit the most self-murder.

Hereditary influences continue, in certain cases, to reveal their curious force. Two cases are on record, in each of which seven brothers have hanged themselves, one after the other. One case was in Saxony and the other in Tyrol. Climate, it has recently been established, has nothing to do with suicide, but the seasons exercise a great effect on it. Spring and summer are the great suicidal periods everywhere. November is the most innocent month in the year, and May, June and July are the worst—so much so, indeed, that twice as many suicides happen in each of them as in any winter month.

THE NOBLE WARRIORS IN OUR NATIONAL ARENA.

Little do we reck as we proceed with the hum drum of our uneventful lives at home, how our Congressmen, several hours each day, are calling up the previous question and rising to a point of privilege, in order that we may enjoy the priceless boon of liberty.

Day after day, while you, gentle reader, are dawdling the precious hours away selling goods or sawing wood, these patriots, far from their homes and loved ones, with aching heads and tearful eyes, are making motions to reconsider, and with clarion voice demanding the floor and battling on over the vital question of mileage.

And yet, while these men have their shoulders under the national fabric, and are fearlessly referring things to committees, or with warlike front and defiant tone moving to lay them on the table, there are croakers at home, with nothing to do but support their families, who speak jeeringly of the labors performed by these noble warriors in the national arena. It is not right.—Nye's Boomerang.

When Robertson, the dramatist, after many hard struggles, saw fame and fortune at last within his grasp, he said to a friend: "I have just got everything I want. I have known every kind of trouble, disappointment and discouragement, even hunger, and now I have every luxury—just as I am going away." He died a month afterward.

SOME SHAKES.

Experiences With the Arkansaw Ague.

"Speakin' 'bout the Arkansaw ager," said the man with the sandy goatee and squint eyes as he leaned back in his chair, "that's what you saw my heart-strings, in case I've got any left to saw on. Gentlemen, gaze on me."

The crowd gazed.

"When I moved down into Arkansaw from Tennessee risin' of sixteen years ago I was purty—I was, for a fact. I had a dozen skulemarms in love with me to once, and hang me up if every gal in the ball-room wouldn't break her neck for the honor of dancin' with me! Yes, I was purty, and I was good. I was so purty that children cried for me, and so good that I was taken fur a preacher on more'n a hundred occashuns. Whar has my purty gone? Why, I've got to be the infernalist alligator in the hull swamp, and I'm growin' meaner at the rate of a mile a day! Fact—solemn fact, and that cantankerous ager is to blame for the hull of it. I've got a squint to my eyes, my nose has been driven back an inch, and what teeth I've got left have to be wedged in every Sunday with pine pegs or I'd swallow 'em. Purty? Why, the sight of my phiz down in St. Louis killed a Texas steer dead'rn a door nail, and I was tryin' to look handsome at that!"

"You said you had the ague."

"Said so! Do you s'pose all the other calamities in this hull kentry could have busted me up this way? You bet I had 'er. I struggled with 'er right along for 'leven straight y'ars without a let up. Gentlemen, let me harrer your souls with a few timely remarks. Your Michigan ager is a grasshopper, and one dose of kyneen knocks 'er dead. Out in Illinoy the ager is bigger—about like a squirril. In Missouri she's about the size of a woodchuck, and when she strikes down into Arkansaw she's a wolf three feet high, seven feet long, and built to take hold like a thousand buzz-saws. Great slams! but what tussles I've had with that are critter! Say, did ye ever ride in a one-hoss wagin over a stone quarry? Was ye ever seated on the top rail of a fence when a hurricane moved it at the rate of six miles a minit? Did ye ever have a cyclone pick ye up and mop you over forty acres of river bottom, and wallop ye through ten acres of woods and use ye for a tool to knock down a hundred acres of cane brake? Well, that ain't the ager—not the Arkansaw kind; it's only the first faint preliminaries."

He stopped to relight his cigar, and then continued:

"I hain't long to live, and don't keer to stretch this thing any. Tellin' the truth has allus bin my strong pint, and allus will be. Maybe ye'll get some idea of the Arkansaw ager when I tell ye that I once unjinted both shoulders in shakin', and it was a light shake at that. When I had on one of my reg'lar double-back-action shakes I could jar a jug of whisky out of the crutch of a tree twenty-eight rods off. Nobody dast pile up cord wood within half a mile of my cabin, and that's a solemn fact. I devoured kyneen just as you eat corn' beef, and my hull system finally got so bitter that a dog who smelt my leg couldn't get the pucker out of his mouth inside of ten days. Gentlemen, I do not wish to prolong this agony. My failin' is grub. Fust I know I'll jump the ager and begin on Arkansaw skeeters, and when I get there I'd harrer yer souls till ye couldn't sleep fur two weeks. We will now have some licker, and I will seek a few needed reposes."—Little Rock Gazette.

A LEFT-HANDED LUNG-TESTER.

At a singing school at Three Springs, Mo., the other night, a young man was bragging about the strength of his lungs, and invited a girl in the company to hit him in the breast. She said she was left-handed, had been washing all day, was tired, didn't feel very active, but at his urgent request let go at him. When his friends picked him up he thought he would die easier lying down. He had lost every recollection of having any lungs, but the young woman consoled him by admitting that she didn't hit him as hard as she might have done, because she rather liked him.

Clara Louise Kellogg says she can make good hash, and Annie Louise Cary announces that she can make delicious buckwheat cakes. MORMON TEACHINGS.

The Blood Atonement—Doctrines of Brigham Young and His Followers.

(Extracts from Brigham Young's Sermons.)

I could refer you to plenty of instances where men have been righteously slain in order to atone for their sins.

But now I say, in the name of the Lord, that if this people will sin no more, but faithfully live their religion, their sins will be forgiven them without taking life.

Now, when you hear my brethren telling about cutting people off from the earth, you consider it is strong doctrine; but it is to save them, not to destroy them.

All mankind love themselves; and let these principles be known by an individual, and he would be glad to have his blood shed. That would be loving themselves even unto an eternal exaltation.

This is loving our neighbor as ourselves; if he needs help, help him; if he wishes salvation, and it is necessary to spill his blood upon the ground in order that he be saved, spill it.

Any of you who understand the principles of eternity, if you have sinned a sin requiring the shedding of blood, except the sin unto death, would not be satisfied or rest until your blood should be spilled, that you might gain the salvation you desire. This is the way to love mankind.

It is true the blood of the Son of God was shed for sins through the fall and those committed by men, yet ye men can commit sins which it can never remit. As it was in the ancient days so it is in our day; and, though the principles are taught publicly from this stand, still the people do not understand them; yet the law is precisely the same.

I have known a great many men who have left this church for whom there is no chance whatever of exaltation; but if their blood had been spilled it would have been better for them. The wickedness and ignorance of the nations forbids this principle being in full force, but the time will come when the laws of God will be in full force.

Will you love your brothers and sisters likewise when they have committed a sin that cannot be atoned for without the shedding of blood? Will you love that man or woman well enough to shed their blood? That is what Jesus Christ meant. He never told a man or woman to love their enemies in their wickedness. He never intended any such thing.

I have known scores and hundreds of people for whom there would have been a chance in the last resurrection if their lives had been taken and their blood spilled upon the ground as a smoking incense to the Almighty, but who are now angels to the devil, until our elder brother, Jesus Christ, raises them up, conquers death, hell and the grave.

There are sins that can be atoned for by an offering upon an altar as in ancient days, and there are sins that the blood of a lamb, of a calf or of turtle doves cannot remit, but they must be atoned for by the blood of the man. This is the reason why men talk to you as they do from this stand; they understand the doctrine and threw out a few words about it. You have been taught that doctrine, but you do not understand.

HIGH NOTES.

A countryman climbed out of a wagon on Austin avenue, entered a music store, and said he wanted to buy a piece of music for his son.

"If your son is not very far advanced, perhaps this would do," said the clerk, handing over a piece of sheet music.

"How much does it cost?"

"Fifty cents."

"Well, that's too easy for him. The last piece I bought for him cost 75 cents. I reckon he knows enough of music to play a piece worth a dollar and a quarter at least. A 50-cent piece is too low. I want a high piece."

The clerk accidentally found an operatic piece that was difficult enough, and the proud father shelled out the cash.—Texas Siftings.

Women do not possess logical minds, and, being very imaginative, are, therefore, not fitted for debate, so Emerson says, but we say that when it comes to a debate as to whether it is necessary or proper for a man to go down town after supper, a woman can give the most logical man a half-mile start, and not only beat him with her imagination, but fix it so that he won't leave the house till after breakfast next morning.

"I tell you," exclaimed the theater manager, "that Miss Ruskin had a splendid reception. The house was fairly ablaze with enthusiasm." "Yes," said Fogg, dryly, "as the house was all paper it was easily set ablaze."

Her loving salutation—"I thought, Miss S., that you hated that flirty minx. Yet you went up and kissed her." Miss S.—"I do hate her, and that is why I did it. Look at the big freckles on her cheek where I kissed the powder off."

"I don't mind the pi-anner much," said a fond but perplexed mother, recently, "but when Marier gets to sallyin' around in front of the lookin'-glass and disputin' in French with her own shadder, it makes me right nervous."

A person described by a Kansas paper as a "bald-headed Judge" rubbed his pate daily with a fresh raw onion, and in two months his hair grew out. It probably came out to ascertain why its proprietor always had the whole room to himself.

A BAD COUPLING.

She married a railroad man,
A locomotive spark;
He told her of his little plan
At the gate, out in the dark.
But long ere a year had gone,
The fire it died slack;
Their coupling weary was grown
And he switched her off his track.

An old toper offered his 10-year-old boy a new nickel if he would fetch him a dark bottle that stood in the corner of the pantry shelf, without his mother's discovering it. The lad secured the prize and was making off with it when his mother suddenly yelled; "What have you got in that bottle, Johnny?" "I don't know," answered the innocent boy; "it's labeled tomato sauce, but it smells just like dad's breath."

DIDN'T WANT TO BE PARTICULAR.

A Detroit lady, with a heart full of charity toward the poor, received a call a few days since to visit an old man in the eastern part of the city who was represented to be greatly in need of nourishing food. She found a poverty-stricken family in need of relief, and, as she was taking her departure from the house, she said to the woman:

"What can I send you that will please the old man's appetite?"

"Well, he's all the time talking about quail on toast," was the reply.

The lady went out with a dim suspicion in her mind that she had fallen in a very particular family, but in the middle of the next block she was overtaken by the woman, who had run after her to say:

"We don't want to put [illegible] to any grand trouble about this. If it isn't handy to send quail on toast, you can [illegible]"

Three negroes were hanged for arson, at Greenville, S. C., on the 28th inst.

The poet-philosopher, Ralph Waldo Emerson, died at his home in Concord, New Hampshire, last week.

Delegate Gannon member of Congress from Utah territory has been expelled from that body under the recently passed anti-Mormon bill.

Alex. H. Stephens will in all probability be the next Governor of Georgia. He writes an open letter in which he says he will not refuse the Democratic nomination.

A telegram dated Washington, April 30, states that the Republicans have accomplished their predetermined purpose of turning Mr. Chalmers, of Mississippi out of Congress, and giving his seat to the malignant negro who claims it.

The Grand Lodge of Alabama I. O. G. T. met in council in Montgomery last week. The meeting was a very harmonious one. It was decided to establish an organ to be devoted to the temperance cause in Alabama, and to be called the "Temperance Herald." It will be published semi-monthly at the price of fifty cents per annum. It will be published at Montgomery under the supervision of M. M. Sweatt, G. W. C. T. and D. A. Clement, G. W. S.

The St. Louis, Montgomery & Florida Railway.

It is proposed to build this road from Florence, on the Tennessee river, in Alabama, to Chattahoochee, on the Chattahoochee river, in Florida. The country along the route cannot be excelled in fertility of soil, and is also one of the finest mineral and timber regions of the whole South. Such a road, if built, would pass through the rich ore beds of Walker and Winston counties, and coming South would tap the iron and coal deposits of Bibb and Shelby at Brierfield. From thence it would run through the magnificent timber region of Chilton and Autauga, and continuing South would pass through the finest portion of the cotton belt of the State, into the wire grass region of Southeast Alabama, and find an outlet to the gulf at Chattahoochee, Fla.

Resolutions were adopted by the Alabama Press Association, asking each member of Congress from this State to petition the general government for aid in behalf of said road, and a bill is now before the Senate asking a grant of lands for such purpose. Without the aid of the general government its construction will be impossible, and it is earnestly hoped that our Senators and Representatives may be successful in obtaining such aid.

Indian Troubles.

At Tuscon, Arizona, on the 25th inst., hostile Indians massacred forty-five white persons in retaliation for the execution of three Indians by the whites. Gov. Tuttle called a mass meeting, at which several thousand citizens were present, and it was determined to raise a force of volunteers to take the field for two or three months. The following letter was sent to the President, his Cabinet and both houses of Congress:

"During the rejoicing incident to the grand military display announced to take place at Fortress Monroe, we beg to offer you as a skeleton to sit at your banquet the fact that nearly one hundred of our pioneers have, within a few days been wantonly murdered in cold blood by the devilish Apaches, whom your cruel and mistaken policy permits to survive their crimes. If some small portion of the expenditure incurred in your grand display could be devoted to such measures as would preclude the probability of an increase in the list of our murdered dead, we could send you greeting of gratitude and cheer in place of this message of our sorrow, helplessness and dessolation.

JAMES H. TOOL, Chairman.
L. C. HUGHES, Secretary."

Whiskey and Ignorance.

Of the 1,500 convicts in the Joliet, Illinois, penitentiary, thirteen are barbers, thirty-one bakers, seven barkeepers (lots of their customers), seventeen butchers, twenty-one clerks, twenty-three cooks, twenty-five farmers, 317 laborers, one lawyer, one clergyman (who murdered his wife), two doctors and 107 of no occupation. There are 553 teetotalers, 482 intemperate and 372 "moderate drinkers." Of Roman Catholics there are 376; Methodists thirty-seven; Presbyterians, thirty-one; Lutherans, thirteen; Baptists, twenty-six; Episcopalians, five; Jews, nine; Christians, nine; no religion or moral training, 973. There are 175 who cannot either read or write, and none who have had liberal educations.

The above paragraph presents some terrible facts. Beginning with the 553 teetotalers, we find in juxtaposition to them, 482 intemperate, and 372 "moderate drinkers," a total of 854 who drink. It is safe to say that two-thirds of the number who claim to be "moderate drinkers" are of confirmed intemperate habits. Further on we find that of the total 1,500 convicts, 973 have no religion or previous moral training, 175 can neither read nor write, and none have had liberal educations. What a startling fact here presents itself, and what a great responsibility has been shirked by those to whom fell the duty of educating and properly training these convicts.

A SOUTH CAROLINA RIOT.

Described in the Trial of the Election Cases—Attacked by Colored Men.

CHARLESTON, April 26.—In the United States Circuit Court to-day, the prosecution rested in the case against John T. Hogg and thirty-eight others, charged with obstructing the polls at the election of 1880. The defense examined two witnesses, who testified that owing to the unsafe condition of the building used as a polling place, the managers adopted a rule that only one voter should be admitted at a time, and two constables were stationed at the door and admitted the voters, one by one. The whites, who had got to the poll first, formed in line as is usual at elections. The negroes, who had camped all night near by, at daylight marched down to the polls in company front, and demanded the right to vote. They were told they could vote as soon as their turn came; and such of them as got into line had every opportunity to vote, and did vote. Between thirty and forty Republican votes were cast before 9 a. m. At about that hour an altercation occurred between a white man and a colored man, and the main body of the colored voters, who had withdrawn from the poll and were stationed about 100 yards off, rushed down upon the whites with a yell, and with clubs, pistols, scythes, and pieces of iron in their hands. By the intervention of white and colored men, a row was prevented and not a person was hurt. The difficulty lasted only about five minutes. At about this time, the leader of the Republicans received a dispatch from one of the county leaders, telling him not to let his men vote, and accordingly they refused to vote any longer. When questioned by several of the whites why they did not vote, the negroes said that their supervisor had failed to come, and it was no use to vote, because the poll would be contested anyhow.

Frank S. Moody, Esq., of Tuskaloosa, is being called out as a candidate to represent his county in the next Legislature. He is one of the most enterprising and substantial citizens of the State, and it would be greatly to Tuskaloosa's interest to elect him to the position, should he be prevailed upon to become a candidate.

A Poet He Would Be.

A Verbena poet has contributed about twenty-five stanzas of "poetry" to our waste basket, of which the following is a specimen. It is not necessary to give the entire poem, besides it is "too awfully utterly" poetical to publish, but should be laid away as the chief of the author's "unpublished poems." Here is the specimen:

I long to be a poet,
  A poet ob de times,
And write for dem big papers
  In dem dar foreign climes.

I'm gwine to be a poet,
  A poet big and fat,
My hat 'll be quite little,
  But mity big my vat.

My hat 'll have tree corners,
  My vat be red and blue,
Cause I'm gwine to be a poet
  And write things mity true.

Callierville Notes.

As we had heard nothing of this hitherto lively burg for some time, we decided to navigate hither one day last week, and find out if our supposition that it had jumped off the "ragged edge" of the grand old State of Chilton, into some less important State, was correct. We are greatly rejoiced at being able to state that our supposition was not correct.

Messrs. Gregory & Coe, of Selma, are preparing to build a large steam saw mill in the vicinity, which will have an average capacity of turning out 25,000 feet of lumber daily, and a tram road is being laid to reach the timber. A planing mill will also be run in conjunction.

Dr. Callier is making considerable improvements on his property, but of a kind that tended to arouse our sympathies for his future guests. He has built a commodious bathing house just over what he calls his "fish pond." It is said that he has stocked said pond with Florida alligators and south sea shark. His guests after a few days' stay will be in a condition for developments — everybody knows that it takes but a short while for any one to fatten on the Doctor's hospitality. When an editor, a commercial man or an importunate political "bummer" has reached this condition, he is invited to the bathing rooms and instructed to "jump in." Whereupon he divests himself of his raiment, and plunges into the interior of a waiting alligator or hungry shark, as the case may be. The Doctor thinks this will be the cheapest way to feed his "fish," as he calls them, and that it will also relieve the country of a vast number of nuisances. We missed being alligator bait by having that clever railroad agent Mr. W. F. Lide, to quarter us in his cosy home. "Misery loves company"—his better-half being absent caused his misery—and he has the lasting gratitude of a several "distinguished" guests whom he entertained at the same time.

We found not a single "prominent citizen" at Callierville who was anxious to feel a stroke of Legislative lightning. However, other portions of the Empire are rolling out candidates so fast, that they will soon be as "thick as leaves in Valambrosa." Dr. Callier will give a big dinner to all the candidates as soon as the campaign gets under good headway. He is anxious to give his "fish" a feast, and also to thin out the number of would-be Legislators.

We were glad to note that every body in the neighborhood seemed to be busy, and the farmers especially so, and that all are hopeful of a fine crop year.

A mob broke open the jail at Minneapolis, Minnesota, on the 28th, and taking therefrom one McManus hanged him to a tree, for having committed a rape upon a four year old child.

Democratic Mass Meeting.

Pursuant to a call by the Chairman of the Democratic Executive Committee, a mass meeting of the Democracy of Chilton county was held at the Courthouse on Wednesday, the 3d inst., for the purpose of sending delegates to the Democratic State Convention, to be held in Montgomery, on the 7th of June.

The meeting was called to order by the chairman of the Executive Committee, who stated it's object and announced that it was ready for business.

J. R. Jones, Esq., was then elected to preside over the meeting and W. H. Lawrence was elected Secretary.

After some little discussion it was decided to elect one delegate from each beat in the county, and Mr. A. J. Brooks then offered the following resolutions for adoption:

Resolved 1st, That the county send eight delegates to the State Convention.

Resolved 2d, That the beats composing the county be called by the Secretary, beginning with No. 1, and as called, those present from such beat, be allowed to put in nomination a man, who shall then be elected as a delegate to the State Convention, and in like manner until all the beats are called.

The resolutions being adopted, the following were elected delegates to the State Convention from the beats named:

Beat 1—Oliver Mullins; beat 2—J. P. Vanderveer; beat 3—William Walker; beat 4—W. A. Collier; beat 5—B. J. Baldwin; beat 6—K. Wells; beat 7—N. W. Foshee; beat 8—Thos. D. Parnell.

There being no one present from beats 1 and 7, on motion, Mr. Brooks, Judge H. J. Callen, and Dr. J. S. Johnson, Sr., were appointed a committee to put in nomination the names of some persons to represent those beats. The nominees of the committee were duly elected.

On motion the delegates elected were instructed and empowered to appoint alternates to attend the State Convention. The alternate to be appointed by the delegate for his beat, should such delegate be unable to attend.

The present Executive Committee was re-elected.

Though the apportionment by the State Executive Committee allows only four delegates to represent Chilton county, application will be made for the admission of eight under the ratio of the August election of 1880.

The meeting was as harmonious as could have been expected.

Randolph Rantings.

Our little town for the past few days has been honored with visits from several of the best citizens of both Chilton and Bibb.

Rev. Dr. Teague, of Wilsonville, filled the pulpit of the Baptist Church, on last Sunday. He delivered an able sermon, and the wish is generally expressed that he will ere long delight us with another such.

Crops are good around here—especially wheat and oats.

Business in general is good. Sell lots of goods and some for cash.

Mr. W. H. Lawrence, of the VIEW, paid us a visit last week for the first time. We were glad to meet him. Well, boys, as I'm a "General," I'll tell you about it. I was busy with some old tin pots, and had forgotten all about Chilton Circuit Court when he suddenly took hold of my arm and asked if my name was General Lee. I didn't feel scared a bit then, and the next day I thought to myself thus: Blamed if he isn't a fine-looking fellow, sure. Yours, &c.,

GENERAL LEE.

A notice in the Opelika Times to the following effect will be of general interest to the Sabbath Schools of the State: "Delegates to the Sunday School Convention of the State of Alabama, to meet in Opelika, on the 23d of May, next, are requested to send forward the names of those who expect to attend to T. C. Pinckard, Opelika, Ala., Chairman of the Committee of Reception, that homes may be provided. Papers of the State friendly to the cause are requested to publish."

We are informed that a resident physician is badly needed in the Wells' Gin neighborhood, in this county. The nearest physician lives ten miles from the settlement.

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY
AND SPERMATORRHŒA.
A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.
Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by

I[illegible] of the winter of 1814 [illegible] was the fate of persons who perhaps [illegible] the snow a painfully long one, and many animals were lost, particularly sheep. There were, however, some remarkable instances of the latter being rescued, after a protracted intombment. One belonging to a gentleman in the South of Scotland was rescued after having been buried six weeks. It was not much the worse for its imprisonment; for, after a little stumbling, it was able to walk home before the shepherd, and by and by was as strong as the rest of the flock. On the 22d of February, a sheep belonging to a farmer in Berwickshire was dug out, after having been for fourteen days intombed in the snow.

The great storm of 1795 lasted for fifty-one days; and on a simultaneous appeal being made to the "Oldest Inhabitant" in all parts of the country, that venerable personage positively failed to conjure up from memory a parallel winter, unless, indeed, it was that of 1740. On the Thames, there was a general suspension of commerce, and it was said there were no fewer than 300 vessels fast in the ice. During the months of January and February, a great many persons perished in the snow or from the cold—and not a few in circumstances exceedingly painful. But there was also a very considerable catalogue of gallant rescues. We select the following two examples of deliverance effected by the agency of the dumb animals, that have always been among the best friends of man. One day toward the end of January, a Norfolk farmer, while returning home from the town of Norwich, became so benumbed by the cold that he was compelled to lie down in the snow. He would undoubtedly have perished but for his dog, which, with a pathetic sagacity, stretched its body across its master's breast, and so protected his lungs from the cold. In this position it lay for several hours, until at length, by continued barking and howling, it attracted attention and relief.

An almost equal power of discernment was displayed in the following instance. About the same period, while a farmer near Huntlycote was, with the assistance of his shepherd, relieving some sheep from the snow-drift at the side of a bank, a large quantity of snow shot down in the form of an avalanche from the higher ground, and enveloped the two men. There they must have remained and perished, but for the sagacity of their two faithful collies. The two dogs at once scampered home, and, by their excited demeanor and continuous howling, aroused the suspicions of the women, whom they by and by induced to follow them to the spot where their masters were buried. Arriving there, the animals commenced to scrape the snow; and, the situation having thus been made plain, the men were dug out, after a confinement of six hours, of which, however, they were not much the worse.—Chambers' Journal.

A TIGER KILLED BY A SHEEP.

Whether it is true that two British sailors once caught a tiger by tempting him into a barrel and then having pulled his tail through the bung-hole, I do not undertake to decide. But that a tiger has been taken prisoner in a blanket is beyond dispute, as also that a tiger, having thrust its head through a wicker crate which was filled with ducks, could not withdraw it, and in this ignominious plight, with the ducks making a prodigious noise all the while, blundered about the camp, until, getting among the horses, it was kicked to death. Tigers have choked themselves by trying to swallow frogs, and in single combat with smaller animals been shamefully defeated.

Thus a man-eating tiger of immense proportions, at one time the pride of the Calcutta collection, was killed under circumstances that covered it with ridicule. It happened that a fighting ram belonging to a soldier in one of the regiments cantoned in the neighborhood became so extremely troublesome that the Colonel ordered it to be sent to the Zoological Gardens. Yet there it was as troublesome as ever, and being no curiosity, though excellent mutton, it was decided to give it to the great tiger. So ferocious was this creature supposed to be that it had a specially constructed cage, and its food was let down through a sliding grating in the roof. Down this, accordingly, the ram was lowered. The tiger was dozing in the corner, but when it saw the mutton descend it rose, and after a long, sleepy yawn, began to stretch itself. Meanwhile the ram, who had no notion that he had been put there to be eaten, was watching the monster's lazy preparations for his meal with the eye of an old gladiator, and, seeing the tiger stretch himself, supposed the fight was commencing. Accordingly he stepped nimbly back to the farthest corner of the cage, and then put down his head, and went straight at the striped beast. The old tiger had not a chance from the first, and, as there was no way of getting the ram out again, the agonized owners had to look on while the sheep killed the tiger.—Harper's Weekly.

BEACONSFIELD'S NOVELS.

His novels are too valuable a revelation of his mind to be passed over, but in themselves they need not occupy us long. They are brimful, nay, foaming over, with cleverness; indeed, "Vivian Grey," with all its youthful faults, gives one a greater impression of purely intellectual brilliance than anything else he ever wrote or spoke. There is some variety in their subjects—"Contarini Fleming" and "Tancred" are more romantic than the others, "Sybil" and "Coningsby" more political—as well as in their merits; the two latest, "Lothair" and "Edymion," works of his old age, being markedly inferior in spirit and invention. But the general characteristics are the same in all—a lively fancy, a knack of hitting people off in a few lines, considerable power of describing the superficial aspects of society, a swift narrative, a sprightly dialogue, a keen insight into the selfishness of men and the vanities of women, with incessant flashes of wit lighting up the whole stage. But it is always a stage. The light is artificial light, not open-air sunshine. Nothing is really like nature. There is not one of the characters whom we feel we might have met and known; nor any whom we should like to know. Heroes and heroines are theatrical figures; their pathos rings false, their love, though described as passionate, seems superficial; it does not spring from the inmost recesses of the soul. The studies of men of the world, and particularly of heartless ones, are the most life-like; yet, even here, any one who wants to feel the difference between the great painter and the clever sketcher need only compare Thackeray's Marquis of Steyne with Disraeli's Marquis of Monmouth, both of them suggested by the same original. There is, in short, an absence of real dramatic power in these stories, just as there is in his play of "Alarcos;" and if we read them with pleasure it is not for the sake either of plot or of character, but because they contain so many sparkling witticisms and reflections, setting in a strong light, yet not always an unkindly light, the seamy side of politics and human nature. The slovenliness of their style, which is often pompous, but seldom pure or correct, makes them appear to have been written hastily—an impression heightened by the undoubted fertility of invention in the earlier ones, where we feel that the sketches the author gives are, so to speak, only a few out of a large portfolio.—Prof. James Bryce, in Century Magazine.

THE MASHER AND THE TERRIER.

A woman and a terrier dog reached the depot half an hour before the time of the train, and, while the woman sat down in the waiting-room as the best thing she could do, the dog made the tour of the room several times and then curled up on a seat not far away to get a wink of sleep before being turned over to the tender care of the baggage-man. All things were so-so, when a young man with a good deal of cane and watch-chain and necktie sauntered in and took a cool survey of the various females. The one nearest the dog not only had a young and pleasant face, but she was all alone. After satisfying himself of this the young man advanced, made a graceluf bow and inquired:

"Beg pardon, but do you go east?"

She nodded.

"Ah! I thought so. If you have any baggage I shall be most happy—ah—shall be most happy——"

He had all the time been preparing to sit down beside her on the dog, and the sentence was not yet finished when he sank gracefully back. Some dogs have been sat down on so often that they don't mind it, but this terrier had always been a pampered pet, and had been given proper time to shake off sleep and get his legs under him. When suddenly buried under 140 pounds of masher, his ideas must have been terribly confused, but not for long. A clock couldn't have ticked over six times when the young man began to rise up and whoop, and he was scarcely up when he made a course for the door which upset every bandbox and sathel for a width of ten feet. As he went out of the door a black object let go of him and trotted back, and it was only when the dog began rubbing against the baseboard [illegible] himself to his former round shape that any one was able to discover why the frenzied young man had left in such a hurry.

PRESENTIMENTS.

An Investigation of the Causes of Those Death Forebodings Which Make Powerful Men Weak.

[illegible]

Much apprehension has been occasioned throughout America from the announcement made by Professor Proctor that the return in nineteen years of the great comet of last summer will cause the destruction of the earth. But while people are becoming so strangely exercised over this announcement, an event of far more serious importance, which is taking place to-day, seems to be almost wholly overlooked. The nature of this most vital subject can be best explained by relating the following experiences:

Bishop E. O. Haven, known to the entire land, was unaccountably awakened one night out of a sound sleep, and lay awake until morning. His mind seemed unusually active, and he not only reviewed his past life, which had been an eventful one, but laid extensive plans for the future. He did not feel especially ill, but could not account for the unusual activity of his brain, nor for the restlessness which seemed to possess him. In the morning he had but little appetite, but was apparently well in other respects. In a few days, however, he began to feel restless and morbid, although he tried earnestly to overcome the feeling which had taken possession of him. But try as he would the shadow of some evil seemed to follow him, and he was conscious of a gradual sinking and wasting away of all his physical faculties. He had been an earnest and diligent worker, and in his zeal frequently overtaxed his strength, and being absorbed in his duties failed to observe the common symptoms with which he was afflicted, thus permitting the work of destruction to go on unheeded. But the end finally came in a most peremptory manner. Shortly before his death he wrote a letter—the last one he ever indited—in which he speaks as follows: "A belief that death is near affects different minds differently, but probably all who are in a fair condition of physical and mental strength instinctively shrink from it with an indefinable dread and horror. A dying man is no more able of himself to foresee his own destiny or the destiny of those he leaves than he was before he began to die."

The recent sad and sudden death of Hon. Clarkson N. Potter is one of the most serious warnings ever given in the long list of innumerable cases of fatal neglect. It is not sufficient to say that many other brilliant men, including Everett, Sumner, Chase, Wood, Wilson and Carpenter, were swept away by the same fatal trouble. The question is, were these men sufficiently careful of their health, and could they have been saved? The Albany Argus, in speaking of Mr. Potter's sudden illness and death, says:

"One of the physicians who attended Mr. Potter here was interviewed last evening. He stated that Mr. Potter's inability to converse had for some time served to baffle the physicians in their efforts to determine the root of his illness. It seems, however, that Mr. Potter, some two years ago, suffered a slight attack of kidney disease. Unwise dependence upon a robust constitution and naturally perfect health, and neglect of proper clothing, doubtless sowed the seeds of a disease that needed but some such personal neglect as that of Tuesday morning to develop. From the symptoms at first shown, it was thought that his only trouble was nervous prostration; but his long continuance in a semi-unconscious state led to the belief that his illness was seated in a chronic difficulty more mysterious and dangerous."

Up to the latter part of last year Mr. Edward F. Rook a member of the New York stock exchange, was doing business in Wall street, New York. He had everything to encourage him, and make life happy, but was the victim of unaccountable uneasiness. His experience as described by one who knew, was as follows: "At unexpected times, and on occasions when he had the greatest reason to feel joyous, he was irritable and haunted with strange feelings of discontent. He endeavored to check these feelings and appear pleasant, but it required a great effort to do so; after which he would again relapse into his former morbid mood. This feeling continued for a number of months, when he became conscious of an added sensation of lassitude. He was tired even when resting, and although experiencing no acute pain, had dull, aching sensations in his limbs and various parts of his body. Shortly afterward his head began to ache most frequently and his stomach failed to digest properly. Being told that he was suffering from malaria he consulted an eminent physician, who informed him that his kidneys were slightly effected, and gave him medicine to restore them. But he grew worse instead of better. He then consulted other eminent doctors of another school and was informed that he had a brain difficulty somewhat in the nature of a tumor, but in spite of all efforts to the contrary he continued to grow worse. At this time his condition was terrible. What were at first simple symptoms had developed to terrible troubles. He was flushed and feverish, constantly uneasy, and yet always weary. He had an intense appetite one day and very little the next. His pulse was irregular, his breathing labored, and every moment of existence was a burden. These disastrous symptoms continued, his face and body became discolored, his heart was irregular in its action, and his breath came in short, convulsive gasps. He grew constantly worse, notwithstanding the utmost precautions of his friends and finally died in the greatest agony. After his death an examination as to its actual cause was made, when his brain was found to be in a perfect condition, and the reason of his decease was of an entirely different nature."

The experiences which have been cited above all had a common cause and were each the result of one disease. That disease, which so deceitfully, yet surely removed the people above mentioned was Bright's disease of the kidneys. In the case of Mr. Rook the examination after death, while showing the brain to be in perfect condition, revealed the terrible fact that he was the victim of a slight kidney trouble, which had gone on unchecked, until it resulted in acute Bright's disease. The leading physicians and scientists of the world are fast learning that more than one-half the deaths which occur are caused by this monstrous scourge. It is one of the most deceitful maladies ever known to the human race. It manifests itself by symptoms so slight and common, as to seem unworthy of attention; and yet these very insignificant symptoms are the first stages of the worst complaint known in the history of the world. Thousands of people have died from troubles that are called heart disease, apoplexy, pneumonia, brain fever, and similar diseases, when it was, in fact Bright's disease of the kidneys. The ravages of this disease has been greatly increased from the fact that until recent years no way was known to prevent its beginning nor checking its increase when it had become once fixed upon the system. Within the past two years, however, we have learned of more than four hundred pronounced cases of Bright's disease, many of them much worse than those above described, and most of whom had been given up by prominent physicians, who have been completely cured. The means used to accomplish this end has been Warner's Safe Kidney and Liver Cure, manufactured in Rochester, N. Y., a remedy that has won its way into the confidence of the public solely upon the remarkable merits it possesses. As a result, it is more widely used and thoroughly praised than any medicine which has ever been before the American public. Indeed, there is not a drug store in the entire land where it cannot be found.

Although Bright's disease is so common in cities, it is still more prevalent in the country. When eminent physicians in the largest cities are not able to recognize Bright's disease, it is only natural that in the country, where there are few physicians of any kind, and those few so unacquainted with the disease as to call it by some other name, it should rage terribly and yet unknown to the ones who are suffering with it. Thousands of people can look back and recall the death of friends from what was supposed to be some common complaint, when it was really Bright's disease, AND NO ONE KNEW IT. The terrible pleuro-pneumonia, which has been so dreaded, is usually the result of uremic or kidney poison. Lung fever can be traced to a similar source. Most cases of paralysis arise from the same difficulty, as well as innumerable fevers, lung, throat, head and bowel troubles. A vast number of ladies have suffered and died from complaints common to their sex called, perhaps, general debility, when, could the real cause have been known, it would have been found to be Bright's disease, unsuspected and under [illegible]. [illegible] the sad cases which have been above described, [illegible] to the experience of many prominent people who were as low as any of the persons mentioned, but who were nevertheless restored to former health and vigor by this same remedy. Among this number are the following prominent names: Col. John C. Whitner, Atlanta, Ga.; B. F. Larrabee, Boston, Mass.; Hon. G. A. Heckman, Phillipsburg, N. J.; Rev. D. D. Buck, D. D., Geneva, N. Y.; Dr. F. A. McManus, Baltimore, Md.; Edwin Fay, Davenport, Iowa; Rev. A. C. Kendrick, LL. D., Rochester, N. Y.; J. S. Matthews, Portland, Mich.; G. W. Eastwood, New York; Dr. A. A. Ramsay, Albia, Iowa; Chancellor C. N. Sims, D. D., Syracuse, N. Y.; Dr. S. P. Jones, Marinette, Wis.; T. S. Ingraham, Cleveland, O.; Henry T. Champney, Boston, Mass.; Elder James S. Prescott, North Union, O., who is a prominent member of the Shaker community, and many others.

To all candid minds the force of the above facts must come with special power. They show the importance of promptness and attention to the first symptoms of disordered health before disease becomes fixed and hope departs. They show how this can successfully be done, and that the dangers which await neglect can only with difficulty be removed.

BISHOP RYLE, of England, says that much of the Christianity of to-day is "jelly-fish religion," of which the basis is, as far as it has any, "no dogma, no distinctive tenet, no positive doctrine." He holds that, both in the Church of England and out of it, there are hundreds of ministers who have not a single bone in their "body of divinity."

Bed-Ridden and Cured.

W. E. Huestis, of Emporia, Kansas, says that his wife has been sick nearly seven years, and for the last four months bed-ridden. She has been treated by a number of physicians and only grew worse. Her attention was called to Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" and "Favorite Prescription," which she commenced using. In one week she could sit up, and in three weeks could walk about. An Open Letter.

MESSRS. ELLIS & CO.—It affords me great pleasure to make the following statement: For FOURTEEN YEARS I have been constantly suffering from chronic hæmaturia—the hemorrhage being at aimes very great, and at no time entirely trrested. The accompnnying congestion of the kidneys frequently was acutely painful. I have had treatment by the best physicians, but their skill gave me no relief. The wide-spread celebrity of the Bailey Springs, in the cure of affections of the urinary organs, determined me to try them. I have been here two weeks and am entirely relieved. Indeed, in less than one week, all appearance or sensation of disease had disappeared as if by magic. I leave for home to-day, and make this voluntary statement, believing that too much cannot be said in regard to the wonderful effects of the waters here. Very truly yours,

N. W. WARD,

Removing the Capitol.

[17.]

A few years ago it was the fashio among a certain clique of politician whose utterances were echoed by a po tion of the press, to clamor for th removal of the Capitol from Washingto to some representative Western city near to the geographical centre of the country. The topic seemed to prove a seven days' wonder, however, and was soon forgotten in the rush and requirements of the Nation's urgent business. Now whether the Capitol will ever be removed or not is not near so interesting a question to some people as whether rheumatism can or will be removed from their bodies. The subject of the removal of this disease from the system has very successfully interested myriads of people, and from the extended expressions conveyed by the almost innumerable statements received from representatives of every class of the community, we append the following brief selection,—premising for the benefit of the reader that the disease referred to is rheumatism or neuralgia and the remedy is that grand old pain panacea—St. Jacobs Oil. The Rt. Rev. Bishop Gilmour, Cleveland, Ohio: "Excellent for Rheumatism and kindred diseases. It has benefitted me greatly." Hon. Carter H. Harrison, Mayor of Chicago: "Has been used in my family and neighborhood with remarkable results, and I think it an excellent remedy." John Carr Moody, Esq., Counsellor-at-Law, Vallejo, Cal.: "The relief afforded in a short time was such as to make me disregard the evidence of my own senses." Capt. Paul Boynton, the World Renowned Swimmer: "I do not see how I could get along without St. Jacobs Oil." Mr. D. W. McDonald, Sergeant-at-Arms of the House of Commons, Ottawa, Can.: "A splendid remedy; cured rheumatism of my wrist and hand." Commander J. B. Coghlan, U. S. N., Mare Island, Cal.: "Complete and wonderful cure of most painful attacks of rheumatism." Wm. H. Wareing, Esq., Asst. General Supt. New York Postoffice: "Proved all that is claimed for the Oil and found efficacious. Ready relief for rheumatic pains." Ex-Postmaster Gen. James, while Postmaster of New York, tersely and characteristically endorsed Supt. Wareing's report by writing: "I concur."

THE BROOK.

BY JAMES WHITCOMB RILEY.

le brook! Little brook!
have such a happy look—a very merry manner, as you swerve and curve and crook—
your ripples, one and one,
ch each other's hands and run,
the laughing little children in the sun.

tle brook, sing to me;
g about a bumble-bee
tumbled from a lily-bell and grumbled mumblingly, cause he wet the film
his wings, and had to swim,
While the water bugs raced round and laughed at him.

ttle brook—sing a song
a leaf that sailed along the golden-braided center of your current swift and strong,
d a dragon fly that lit
the tilting rim of it,
And rode away and wasn't scared a bit.

d sing—how oft in glee
me a truant boy like me, loved to lean and listen to your lilting melody, il the gurgle and refrain
your music in his brain
Wrought a happiness as keen to him as pain.

ttle brook—laugh and weep—
not let the dreamer weep;
him all the songs of summer till he sink in softest sleep;
d then sing soft and low rough his dreams of long ago—
ing back to him the rest he used to know!

IN A SINGLE NIGHT.

"What a beautiful young woman! d yet her hair is white as snow."

"And her complexion fresh as is a ld's. Strange, is it not?"

Thus two loungers on a hotel porch. t they did not know the history of t snowy hair.

* * * * *

From the time Harry Wells fell in love h Mamie Clausen at church socials til their marriage in the First Presbyian Church, the entire community e minute consideration to their affairs. mie's father, John Clausen, was a minent commission merchant in a nnsylvania town, generally considd wealthy, and always lived like a n of means. Mamie was pretty, dash-, a local belle, and a general favorite. rry's family lived a few miles from n, and they, too, were people of retation in the country.

The marriage was in every way a suitle one. Harry was educated in Prince; and although he had at one time the putation of being wild he had sobered wn and was such a frank, manly young low that he was generally forgiven y indiscretion.

The marriage was the occasion of eral rejoicing. Mamie's father gave r an unusually good send off, and the tails were sent far and wide through e State. Harry had studied law for while and had settled down into a untry notary, drawing up deeds, and ing hack-work of that sort. They ed about four miles out of town and o miles from old John's. He had built em a pretty modern cottage on a deched portion of his farm. Harry had s office, an ornamental little structure, few rods from the house, and there ey lived as happy as two birds.

Gradually Harry picked up business, d finally, through his father, he beme trustee for some minor heirs, ey were an odd lot of children, with half-crazy mother and no end of coal ds and mining investments. It was good thing for Harry, although it gave naturally lazy man some additional rk. The worst thing was that it liged him to go to Scranton now and en and leave Mamie. When Harry d to go away, Mamie would get in her aeton and drive to town and there re always some of the young people ady to go out and keep her company. arry always insisted that she must not y alone. For a law-abiding State, nnsylvania has a pretty rough element in it, and there is a general sense uneasiness.

One August afternoon Harry had an expected summons to go to Scranton out a suit connected with the minor irs. He had recently sold some of eir property, and had been making rious collections, which left in his nds about forty-five hundred dollars. hen he found that he had to go off at few moments' notice, he wrapped up a ndle of papers and this money, and ok them into the house. Mamie was aking preparations for a picnic they re to go to the next day, and begged m to wait until the day after.

"But, my dear child, I haven't time en to go to town and put these in the nk, so you'll have to take care of em. I'll try and get back in two days the furthest, and meanwhile nobody ill know that the money is here."

Then he explained to her the value of e papers, and handed her a canvas bag in which was the $4,500 belonging to the minor heirs.

"Where will I keep it, Harry? Between the mattresses?"

"Just like a woman! No. But I declare I don't know where to tell you. The most insecure place apparently is often the most secure. Any place, dear, but between the mattresses. I leave that to you. But you must guard it, if necessary, with your life; for, remember the money is not ours, and at all hazards I am responsible. I don't really suppose there is the least danger, for no one knows I have it. But one ought to take proper precautions, and I beg of you not to admit any tramps while I am gone. Tell Sarah not even to allow them to eat a biscuit."

"All right, dear; we won't let the tramps have a drink even, and I'll take care of the money, you may be sure."

Harry bade his wife good-by, and Mamie gave up the picnic. At the end of two days she received a telegram from him, saying he had been detained, and telling her to get some one to stay with her two days, when he would be at home. She drove into town, and one of her old friends went out with her. At the end of two days she had another telegram saying that he was detained until the next day. Her friend went home, and in place of Harry came a third telegram, and so every day for ten days he was expected home, and every day came a disappointing telegram. By this time she had become accustomed to her charge, which she had set like a bag of seed beans in a corner of a dark closet opening from her room.

The afternoon of the tenth day was a hot, murky afternoon. Mamie had gone up stairs to take a nap and refresh before dressing to meet Harry, who was expected home after the longest absence he had ever made from her.

After a time Sarah came up and told her there was a tramp down stairs who wanted something to eat and who would not be driven off.

"You oughtn't to leave him a minute alone, Sarah. Go down and watch him and I will come down and send him off."

She dressed herself quickly and went down stairs, surprised to find how late it had grown. When she reached the kitchen she found also a messenger with a telegram, which announced another disappointment, but the next day without fail, Harry wrote, he would be home. As Mamie turned into the kitchen she heard the tramp and Sarah in evident dispute.

"Yes," said the fellow, "when that time comes your mistress will have another ironing-table, helping you, instead of wearing her Sunday clothes every day."

"An' spoilin' everything for me to do over. I think I see her. I've work enough to do," answered honest Sarah, not indisposed to have a chat over her work.

Mamie found a graceless-looking fellow, unshaven and ill-dressed, who, with a certain gentlemanly instinct, rose up as she came in.

"I suppose my girl told you we had nothing for you, and that it will be a great kindness if you will leave as soon as possible."

"Yes, she did just that, madam, but I took it upon myself to believe that it wasn't so urgent. The truth is, I'm very hungry and dead tired, and I didn't believe but that you would give me something to eat; at least I've waited to ask you in person."

Women are soft-hearted creatures. Mamie went and got him something to eat herself. The darkness that had been increasing for some time came down rapidly, and there burst out one of those terrific thunder-storms that gather so rapidly and with such force in that country. After its strength was spent there fell steady sheets of rain that brought the creek over the bridges before morning.

"Madam, it's no use talking. You can't send a fellow out in such a storm," said the tramp, as the three stood on the porch watching the storm.

"I'm sorry, but I've no place for you."

"What! in a house like this? It's a pity there isn't a cranny for a stowaway. I was walking around it, waiting for the girl, and it seems to me it ought to hold three people."

"You are very impertinent. I tell you I have no place for you, and the storm is already breaking away."

Even as she spoke the rain came down in blinding sheets, and lightning streaked the heavens.

"Well," he said, carelessly, "we don't go much on manners on the road, but I know I wouldn't send a dog out such a night as this. I'm not a particular chap, leastwise not nowadays, and I'll have to insist on your giving me some sort of shelter, if it's only your dog-kennel."

The man spoke with decision. Mamie felt that after all they were really in his power.

"I will keep you on one condition," she said. "There's a loft to the house, a sort of garret, which is very comfortable. It is closed with a trap-door, and you may sleep on the lounge there if you will allow us to lock the door on the outside."

"Bless my stars and garters!" he said, looking at her seriously, "I don't care if you lock the door."

They took him up-stairs, and he climbed up the steep attic stairs. The women shut the door as he politely bade them good-night, and they fastened the padlock, hearing him chuckle to himself as he kicked off his boots.

"I'd take the key, mum," said Sarah.

Mamie took the key with her, and the two descended to shut up the house. After they had made everything secure, they went back up-stairs.

"You must sleep in my room tonight, Sarah," the mistress said. Sarah dragged in her bedding and made a pallet on the floor, and then, after the custom of women, they examined the closets, looked under the bed, and piled the chairs against the locked door. The rain was still falling heavily and the night as black as ink. The mistress and maid went to bed, and although worried and anxious went to sleep.

After midnight Mamie found herself awake, and a bright light shining in the room. She started up, and saw that it was the moonlight. The storm had cleared away at last. She got up, unable to compose herself immediately, and went to the window. The moon was shining brightly. As she stood, looking at the peaceful scene before her she saw away down the road, for it was bright as day, several horsemen. It was such an unusual sight at this hour that she stood watching them as they came nearer. To her surprise they turned up the lane leading toward her house, and on reaching the gate came into the yard. She was almost paralyzed with fear. The truth flashed across her. They must have learned that she was alone—that she had this money, and they had come to get it. For a moment she was paralyzed. She remembered Harry's last words: "You must guard it with your life if necessary."

She ran to the sleeping Sarah and wakened her. She got down Harry's rifle. The sleeping girl was soon thoroughly awake, and she explained to her their situation.

"It's the tramp that's done it."

"The tramp? No, Sarah, the key, the key of the attic."

She flew up the stairs, unlocked the padlock and opened the trap. The man sprang up at the sound.

"Come, come with me." His own senses alert, and hearing the noise of the horses below and steps about the house, he followed her without a word. At the foot of the stairs she stopped.

"I have a large sum of money in the house, and those men have come to get it, thinking that I am alone. If they kill me that money must be guarded."

"What have you? pistols, shotguns?" he whispered, taking in the whole situation.

"Here is my husband's rifle. It is loaded."

"Hist! Where are they going to break in?" The steps came boldly on the piazza to the front door.

"Get behind me. I will fire at the first man who enters. How many barrels are there?"

"Six, all loaded."

"Very well. Keep this case in your hand for me, in case I need it."

There was no storming of shutters. They heard the key applied to the door softly. It opened, and a man followed by two others confidently entered. The first figure walked directly to the stairs. He had taken but a step when three shots came in rapid succession. There was a heavy thud; this man dropped and the other two turned and fled. Sarah ran to the window and two horses galloped down the lane.

"Don't faint, madam; there is work yet to do," said the tramp.

Mamie caught hold of the rail for support, and then went into the room.

"Get a candle, Sarah."

They lighted a candle and gave it to the tramp, who went down stairs, the two women following with brandy and ammonia. The man had fallen backward, and lay with his face up and head toward the door.

"Aha!" said the tramp, curiously, holding the light up and peering into the dead man's face, "he's fixed. Shot through the head."

Mamie advanced and gazed at the white face, across which a thin threadlike stream of blood was trickling. She fell back with a wild shriek.

It was her husband's dead body which lay before her.—New York World.

CAUGHT AT LAST.

As Mrs. Oates was going up the steps of the theater she saw a 12-year-old boy struggling in the hands of the police. The lady is naturally of a sympathetic turn, and stopped the police to see if so young a lad could not be kept out of the city jail.

"Don't take that poor little boy to jail," she said. "I'll pay his fine."

"Hasn't been fined yet," said Officer Solomon.

"He looks like a good boy," continued Mrs. Oates. "If you let him go I'll give him something to do as a supe. Pray, what crime might so nice a little boy commit?"

"Defacing posters," reported the officer.

Mrs. Oates, who was bending over the boy and about to stroke his curly head, assumed an erect, not to say tragic, position immediately.

"Whose posters?"

"Those pictures of Alice Oates in red tights and tassels all along the side of the leg. He cut both legs off with a jack-knife. He cuts up all the posters that come along."

"Say no more," hissed the actress, "away with him to the lowest dungeon. I know him; he cut my head and arms off in Chicago, carved me to pieces in New York and cut all my legs off all over San Francisco. Here, you pretty policeman, here's $10 for catching the confounded little scamp. I hope he will go to the penitentiary; will he?"

"We swear it," said both officers, holding up their right hands.

"You are a nice chap, ain't you?" continued Mrs. Oates, putting her arms akimbo as in "Madame Angot;" "a nice boy to grow up in a Christian country and walk the high road to the gallows. Where do you expect to die when you go to? Beside trying to ruin me in the estimation of the public, see what a lot of trouble you have put these good, kind policemen to. You can go, sir."

On receiving such a scathing lecture, the boy blubbered heartily and went sobbing to jail.—Salt Lake Tribune.

The English-speaking people of the earth, numbering not more than one-sixteenth of the entire population of the globe, publish over one-half of the newspapers in existence. The total number of publications of all kinds we find to be 34,274. Of these 4,020 are dailies, 3,857 are tri and semi-weeklies, 17,889 weeklies, 4,836 monthlies, and 3,672 semi-monthlies, quarterlies, annuals and various other irregular periods of publication. These are distributed around the hemisphere as follows: Europe utilizes 19,557, North America, 12,400; Asia, 775; South America, 699; Australia, 661, and Africa, the original home of the Fifteenth amendment brings up in the rear with 182. The total circulation per issue of these papers is found to be 116,400,000, while the total number of copies printed annually reaches the enormous and almost inconceivable amount of 10,589,499,448 copies.

Germany publishes the greater quantity of papers, the publications of that country reaching 5,529 in number with an annual circulation of 1,743,000,000, or about thirty-eight to each inhabitant. Great Britain has less papers in number, 4,082, but the circulation is greater than those of Germany, reaching 2,262,000,000 per annum, giving sixty-four copies each year to each of her citizens. France, has 3,265 periodicals, with an annual circulation of 1,557,000,000.

While the United States can show no daily paper with a circulation of over 125,000 copies per issue, I find that Paris contains one daily paper, entitled Le Petit Journal, which has a daily circulation of 580,000. It contains all the news of the day, beside plenty of gossip and society news, and sells for a sou, or a cent. In London appears a paper called Lloyd's Weekly, a twenty-eight-column sheet, which enjoys the wonderful circulation of 612,000 copies per issue. This paper is sold for 1 penny, English money, or about 2 cents in that of the United States.—H. P. Hubbard, in Boston Globe.

A REVERSIBLE JOKE.

A Burlington man wedded a young wife. The lady became enthused over Will Carleton's tale of the elopement of a handsome young woman with a "handsomer man," and determined to try the same thing herself. She wrote a neat little note, stating that she had left home with a gentleman whom she had dearly loved before she had met her husband, and that he need not trouble himself to look for them. Then she called in her younger brother and went calling with him, arranging to return and hide where she could witness her liege lord's dismay when he came to read of her flight. She from her place of concealment saw him enter, saw him look all around in surprise at her absence, and finally saw him discover the note. He opened and read it, while her heart beat high with excitement in anticipation of the breaking out she expected to hear.

The poor fellow finished the cruel missive, tore it up, and threw the fragments on the floor, and then, without a moment's warning, drew a revolver and fired point-blank at his breast, and fell without a sign of life to the carpet. With a terrified scream, the woman was at her husband's side in a moment, lifting his head, rolling him, shaking him, turning him, and hunting for blood, all the time shrieking to her William to speak to her, to forgive her, to only look at her. William lay motionless, however, and the neighborhood, aroused by the shot and screams, came flocking in to learn of the excitement, when suddenly, when a score or more had gathered, the dead leaped up from the floor as well as ever, at which the wife fainted away. She soon revived however, and then it all came out that the younger brother, being in sympathy with William, had let him into the scheme, and he had chosen that mode of punishing his joking wife. She jokes no more, but her husband has compromised on a pony phaeton to keep peace in the family.—Burlington Hawk-Eye.

HIBERNATING ANIMALS.

What we understand by the hibernating of animals ought not, strictly speaking, to be called hibernation, since it is precisely analogous to that which is common in tropical countries during seasons of intense heat. The Germans call one "winter sleep" and the other "summer sleep." There seems to be no essential difference between the two states; nor is there, in the opinion of most authorities, any difference between the ordinary sleep of an animal and its long winter sleep, except that the latter is the more profound. It is a popular mistake to suppose that the winter sleep of animals is due to extreme cold, since, as a matter of fact, almost all hibernating creatures go to sleep before the extreme cold of winter sets in. Beside, as has been said, a precisely similar phenomenon is met with in the torrid regions of the earth. Mr. Darwin, in his journal, says: "When we first arrived at Bahia Blanca, Sept. 7, we thought nature had granted scarcely a living creature to this sandy and dry country. By digging in the ground, however, several insects, large spiders and lizards, were found in a half-torpid state. On the 15th a few animals began to appear, and by the 18th, three days from the equinox, everything announced the commencement of spring. The birds began to lay their eggs, numerous insects were crawling about, while the lizard tribe, the constant inhabitants of a sandy soil, darted in every direction." "It is well known," adds the same writer, "that within the tropics the hibernation, or, more properly, estivation of animals is governed by the time of drought."

TO MAKE A POMPON.

Cut off the legs and wings of your drake at the first joint. Cut off the bill where the feathers terminate. Split the skin under the head down to where the neck begins. Cut through the skin on the back, near the wing, up to the beginning of the neck. Then begin carefully to draw off the skin. On reaching the neck, gently draw the skin over, after having skinned the head and cut it off, care having been taken to cut around the eyes. To prepare the skin, lay it on a warm stove, with the bare skin up, and dry slowly. Lay on magnesia to absorb the oil, and frequently lay fresh brown paper on it; a warm (not hot) flatiron to be placed on the paper. Should any stain get on the feathers, a [illegible] in a little [illegible] and [illegible] will remove it. The breast makes a beautiful pompon, and the soft wing feathers from the body can be used for [illegible].—[illegible]

THE EDITORIAL "WE."

The Oil City Derrick gives the above subject a h'ist as follows: Some people are unreasonably inquisitive and curious, especially about matters that do not concern them in the least. For example, here is a correspondent who makes the startling revelation that he is a "constant reader of our valuable and influential paper," and would like to be informed why it is an editor or newspaper writer, when speaking of himself in his writings, invariably uses the plural pronoun "we" instead of the singular "I."

There are several reasons. Self-preservation is the first law of nature. It begins at home, like old Mother Charity. There is some human nature about an editor, public opinion to the contrary notwithstanding. An editor thinks too much of his "I's" to wear them in mourning, and therefore, when speaking of some slab-sided six-footer as a miserable red-nosed, pusillanimous, wife-beating snoozer, he considers it the better part of valor to drop in an occasional "we." This creates in the mind of the six-footer the impression that the editorial force consists of a standing army, armed with deadly "we"-apons.

Furthermore, in cases where the victim comes around to the office to kill the writer of any particular item, it is so pleasant to have the guilty man's identity buried in the obscurity of the plural "we." The editor-in-chief, the commercial editor, the city editor, the local editor, the reporters, the bookkeepers, compositors, book-binders, jobbers, pressmen, devil and all the delivery boys are thus placed on a common footing by the little pronoun "we," and when the enraged person looks about him and finds how many homes he would make desolate, how many wives he would make widows and how many children orphans, by killing off all included in the little "we" at one fell swoop, he sickens of the sanguinary undertaking, turns sadly away, goes to some bar-room, takes a drink, condemns the paper, prophesies that it is being run into the ground, and declares that he will henceforth use his political influence to squelch the sheet.

There are other reasons. When noticing a marriage or birth "we" implies that at least a box of cigars will be required to go round.

An editor says "we" when advising the President how to conduct his administration, because the President might not act on his suggestion if it was written plain "I."

When telling the minister how to preach the editor uses "we" to induce the belief that he has just had a conference with all the ex-ministers about the establishment.

The editor who tells the teacher how to teach says "we," because he has consulted with his wife about the matter, and she, having been a teacher a few years before, of course knows all about it.

"We" is sometimes used because of the writer's modesty. Most writers are troubled in this respect.

In short, we use "we" because no one man could survive the trials, tribulations and taffy found about a print shop.

TITLED IMMIGRANTS.

In Russia, as well as in Germany, Austria and one or two other minor northern realms, a nobleman's title is inherited by all his sons, who in their turn transmit it unmodified to their male offspring, and so on ad infinitum. Needy nobles necessarily abound in such countries, and, as a title is so frequently held to incapacitate its owner from practicing professions or engaging in commercial pursuits, the large immigration into our Western States of many energetic young men, whose illustrious descent stands immovably in the way of their worldly advancement at home, may be accounted for.

JUDGE SHERRETT, the man in whose office Horace Greeley learned to stick type, is still living at the ripe old age of 82. He says he thought the first time Horace applied for work that he was a runaway apprentice, and he turned him rather abruptly, but afterward learned who he was from a neighbor near the State line, and sent for him, and took him to his house to board with him. Horace was a slow boy, but full of pluck and perseverance.

It has been decided by the supreme court of this State that a prisoner cannot be forced to work out the fine and costs both, in case hard labor is imposed on said prisoner. As it now stands, a prisoner can only be worked for fine, and not costs.—Birmingham Observer.

Somewhat in error, brother. The decision was to the effect that prisoners should not be sentenced to hard labor to pay costs accruing from their witnesses. State costs are to be paid as heretofore.

The Grand Jury's Report.

The report made by the Grand Jury was a somewhat lengthy, though not important one, much of it being taken up with reports of the condition of the books of the various county officers, all of which were reported well kept. They report a balance in the hands of the county treasure of $2418.66. The following is the most important portion of the report:

"We are pleased to state that crime is on the decrease in our county. And that most of the offences brought to our attention for investigation are of the lowest grade. As the result of our labors we return into court sixteen true bills."

Justifiable Sarcasm.

A late number of the New York Independent contains some suggestions by Rev. Plato Johnson, which are worthy of more than a passing thought. He says:

"Now, den, take de case ob dat Guiteau. W'en he borred de money, an' bought dat pissel, an' watched day arter day to git a good chance to shoot de President, an' hired a kerridge to take him outer de way w'en de deed was done—all dat proves, 'cordin' to de science ob the nineteenth century, dat he din't hab no sense an' was insane. He can't be held 'sponsible fer a little t'ing like dat. Ef yer asks him if he is 'sponsible, he sez 'Ob course I ain't,' an' don' he know more bout it dan' enny one else? He sez it was de Lord dat put him up to it; an' ef yer can't 'rest de Lord, w'at's de use ob 'restin' de man dat de Lord hired to do it? Dat is de solid foundations ob reason on which we rest.

"De new theology aint much like dat ob de Pilgrim Fathers. Is it? Dey would hab made short work wid Guiteau. Dey would had p'inted to de prisoner, an' sed in the languidge ob de Old Testament, 'Thou shalt not kill,' an' dey would have added, 'Say yer prayers Mr. Prisoner an' make 'em short, for in five minutes yer'll be windin' on yer way inter anodder worl'.' But we is different; yes, werry different. De way we look at t'ings makes me t'ink dat de Lord an' de debbil has got so mixed up togedder dat yer can't tell w'ich is w'ich. 'Cording to de new theology, it 'pears like de debbil has said: 'Good Lord, Ise had a orfle lot to do in 'Merica lately, an Ise done tired out. Won't yer kinder look a'ter a few little jobs fer me w'ile I take a nap?' An' de lord had answered: 'Good debbil, yer hez had a hard time ob it, fer shore. I hain't got much ter do in my line jess now, an' I kin 'tend ter yer work well es not. Tell you wot it is, brudder, w'en we gits so bad dat we lays all de 'sponsibility ob our crimes on de Lord, it's 'bout time dat we was shook up in de same bag wid dose Pilgrim Fathers fer a little w'ile, to see ef we can't rub off on our clothes some ob de dust of dere way ob doin' t'ings."

A shoemaker at St. Charles, Mo., attempted to suicide the other day. It is supposed that he had lost a good deal on a contract for getting up a pair of St. Louis shoes.

From sixty to 100 persons visit Guiteau daily.

TUSKALOOSA.

Notes of the Old Capital—The Druid City and Its People Fifty Years Ago.

NUMBER III.

Before a just tribute to the Doctors, I must not fail to mention some persons of mark overlooked at the proper time, as Gen. Dennis Dent, Senator and prominent citizen, whose breadth of mind and force of character, compensated for absence of early culture. He was a man large of person, and majestic of presence, felt, whenever you were in his presence, who, a little agitated, always batted his eyes many times, giving a peculiarly forcible expression to his features. Gov. Arthur P. Bagby, looking like a Roman senator, tall, muscular, ruddy, and athletic, of weighty eloquence, and august person. The star men of the University, were Frank W. Bowdon, an orator and logician by nature. When he and Joseph W. Taylor, were pitted in the great argument about the removal of the capital, Mr. Taylor, who was very ornate, drew several illustrations from the Arabian Nights, whereupon, Mr. Bowdon, in his reply, observed that he had never read the Arabian Nights, and didn't know whether 'it was a treatise on constitutional law or not!' Andrew L. Pickens, was of weakly physique, but Addisonian taste, and eloquent, exquisitely eloquent, after the inimitable style of the Hon. A. H. Stephens (the Edmund Burke of the age, as a statesman). William Bibb Billingslea, was the prince of his day, who, when others recited correctly, surpassed them by reciting brilliantly. John G. Barr mastered every subject almost intuitively. He could read twelve or fifteen pages of Wayland's Moral Science over twice, and repeat it verbatim, being able, in imagination, as it was told, to see the letters, and even the commas, as if the page were literally before his eyes!

Dr. Samuel Meek, had a drug store just opposite the old Bell Tavern. He educated a large family marvelously, was a fine physician, a strong preacher, an enthusiastic politician, and a man of vehement convictions. Who has forgotten his towering person and fearless bearing? Dr. Guild, was a marvel of neatness, quiet, suave, industrious, skillful. The last time I saw him, I looked at his face as he rode along, unchanged by many years, and then for his boots, as glossy as ever. Dr. Hullum, dressed like a D'Orsay, standing on the corner, where the old Washington Hall was, is imagined as distinctly as yesterday. Dr. Little had the same drug store fifty years ago. Since the war I found him on a split-bottomed chair, right on the side walk, as in 1836, surrounded by Prof. Stafford, Dr. Cochran and several others, while "Maj. Commegys" was passing by, and felt like it was 1838 or 1840 still. Dr. Searcy's amiable face and woman's gentleness. Dr. Leland's wiry person, agile movements and Old Hickory features; Dr. Haywood's courtly presence, all recurred. Noble men of science, these! Several survive. Services, generously rendered by Drs. Edding, Leland and Haywood, in a terrible sickness will never be forgotten.

The recollections of those days, unmingled with anything unpleasant, yet come back and renew the experience of aspiring youth, when one 'held the cornucopia in his own hand.' This was one of the happy expressions of Andrew L. Pickens.

"Ye mind me o' departed joys, Departed never to return."

Verbena Views.

Verbena was again enlivened with one of her fine entertainments gotten up by her cultivated ladies, on last Friday evening. First, the operetta of "Cinderella," was performed by the "Juvenile Academy Troupe," composed of the scholars of Miss Watson's Academy. The first scene represented the Baron's kitchen, in which the fairies appear to relieve Cinderella, of the labors which fall to her, as "drudge of all work," and in which the Fairy Godmother effects her wonderful transformation. The "pumpkin huge," and "little grey mice," supposed to be perfect imitations. Next a room in the palace of Prince Truelove, where he receives his illustrious guests, and in running from which Cinderella loses her "Golden Slippers." The third scene returned us to the Baron's kitchen, where the family being assembled, the Prince, with his attendants arrive, seeking the wearer of the slipper, whom he discovers in Cinderella. Here also, occurs the famous transformation scene when, by the power of the Fairy Godmother, the whole party are instantly transported to Court, and Cinderella's ragged garments changed to splendid robes, and where all are made happy and content. The fairy dresses were all designed and executed by Mrs. Wm. McGuire, who with Miss Mary McLemore, performed some guitar duetts, between the acts. The second piece was called "A Family not to Pattern After," the parts sustained by Dr. Pitts, Miss McLemore, and some of the members of the "Troupe."

The performance was excellent and the "little folks" especially deserve great credit for the successful manner in which they went through with their parts.

Mr. Brook's new store is going up very rapidly and will soon be ready to be occupied.

The work on the hotel is not progressing as rapidly as it should.

The young people seem to be enjoying themselves hugely. And a lovelier set of young ladies or a finer looking set of young men, than are in Verbena, it would be difficult to find. ECNERWAL.

Mr. T. M. Ternan, lately brought to this office specimens of gold which were found on his property about four miles from Verbena in the Blue Creek neighborhood. He tells us that he has frequently found nuggets of the pure metal half as large as a hen egg, and free from all rock or soil. He finds it on the surface. We are glad to know that he intends shortly to begin operations to discover whatever may be beneath the soil in the form of ore. We wish him success, and that the Blue Creek neighborhood may become a new Eldorado.

Victor Hugo on Love.

There is within us an immaterial being, an exile in our bodies, which is destined to survive eternity. This being of pure essence and a better nature in our soul which gives birth to all enthusiasms, all affections, which apprehends God and Heaven. The soul, so superior to the body to which it is bound, would remain upon the earth in an unendurable desolation were it not permitted to choose from among all other souls a companion which shares with its misery in this life and happiness in eternity. When two souls which have thus sought each other, for a longer or shorter time, in the multitude, find each other at last, when they have seen that they agree together, that they understand each other, in a word that they are alike, then there is established between them forever a union ardent and pure as themselves, not to end in heaven. That union is love, true love, such, indeed, as very few men understand it. This love is a religion, which deifies the being beloved, which lives by devotion and enthusiasm, and to which the greatest sacrifices are the sweetest pleasures. Love, in this divine and true acception, elevates all the sentiments above the miserable human sphere. We are likened to an angel who lifts us unceasingly toward heaven.

Longfellow and Emerson were unbelievers in the christian religion. How vapid is their fame when the thought recurs that their souls are in perdition.

One of the conductors on L. & N. accommodation train tells us that Clanton, Chilton county, has had its name changed to jug town. He says every passenger getting off there, from ten years old and upward, carries a jug with him. How is that for a prohibition town, Brother Lawrence? Do you stand in with the boys?

Birmingham Observer.

Not exactly, friend. We are "one of the boys," but not one of the "juggers." But how is it with the Magic City? A half dozen saloons to every business street; one of which is said to be first-class, and the grade of the other forty-seven not known; and every other man you meet is prepared, with a black bottle in his side pocket, to step around the corner and "smile and smile," until he has to take to his little bed before he is in a condition to "smile" again.

FOR NERVOUS DEBILITY

AND SPERMATORRHŒA.

A valuable Discovery and New Departure in Medical Science, an entirely New and positively effective Remedy for the speedy and permanent Cure of Seminal Emissions and Impotency by the only true way, viz: Direct Application to the principal Seat of the Disease, acting by Absorption, and exerting its specific influence on the Seminal Vesicles, Ejaculatory Ducts, Prostate Gland, and Urethra. The use of the Remedy is attended with no pain or inconvenience, and does not interfere with the ordinary pursuits of life; it is quickly dissolved and soon absorbed, producing an immediate soothing and restorative effect upon the sexual and nervous organizations wrecked from self-abuse and excesses, stopping the drain from the system, restoring the mind to health and sound memory, removing the Dimness of Sight, Nervous Debility, Confusion of Ideas, Aversion to Society, etc., etc., and the appearance of premature old age usually accompanying this trouble, and restoring perfect Sexual Vigor, where it has been dormant for years. This mode of treatment has stood the test in very severe cases, and is now a pronounced success. Drugs are too much prescribed in these troubles, and, as many can bear witness to, with but little if any permanent good. There is no Nonsense about this Preparation. Practical observation enables us to positively guarantee that it will give satisfaction. During the eight years that it has been in general use, we have thousands of testimonials as to its value, and it is now conceded by the Medical Profession to be the most rational means yet discovered of reaching and curing this very prevalent trouble, that is well known to be the cause of untold misery to so many, and upon whom quacks prey with their useless nostrums and big fees. The Remedy is put up in neat boxes, of three sizes. No. 1, (enough to last a month,) $3; No. 2, (sufficient to effect a permanent cure, unless in severe cases,) $5; No. 3, (lasting over three months, will stop emissions and restore vigor in the worst cases,) $7. Sent by mail, sealed, in plain wrappers. Full DIRECTIONS for using will accompany EACH BOX.

(Send for Sealed Descriptive Pamphlets giving Anatomical Illustrations and Testimony, which will convince the most skeptical that they can be restored to perfect manhood, and fitted for the duties of life, same as if never affected. Sold ONLY by)

ABOUT TEA-TASTING.

The tea-brokerage business was begun in a small way forty years ago, and has been constantly increasing until it has become an immense specialty. The commission is a half cent a pound, and the smallest amount that a broker will sell is five packages. He obtains samples from the importer and gives his customers an opportunity of carefully testing the article. Hence in a tea broker's office the kettle is always boiling, and the center-table has its extended array of teacups. The drawing is carefully weighed, and for one must turn a silver half dime, this being the usual weight. Generally a score of samples are tested at the same time, in order to make comparison. The tea-traders first try the aroma and then sip it in order to get the flavor. What nicety of taste must be required to fix values in this rapid manner! An expert tea-taster, however, will not only designate the price, but often specify the part of China in which the crop was grown. Tea-tasting is said to be a gift, and some can never succeed while others all at once display skill. A good taster must be of rather nervous temperament, because tea appeals to the nervous system, and the business is, therefore, one in which the latter is severely tried and sometimes is shattered.

Tea brokers are sometimes obliged to taste 300 samples in a day, and during the business season 200 is an average. One reason for this excess is found in the fact that a broker may be employed to buy the entire stock for some important house. Hence he must exercise great care; but, while he makes great profits, his health suffers to a corresponding degree. The constant effect of such a stimulant indeed cannot be escaped. Tea enters the system by inhaling, and also through the mucous membrane, and lastly by the stomach. The result, as has been stated, is distressing to the nervous system, the consequences being varied according to personal idiosyncrasies. They are, however, of sufficient importance to have a place in the medical record. The tea broker must also resign the social nature of tea drinking, and when he comes home at night with a mouth irritated with professional tasting how annoying must be the announcement that "tea is ready." The leading tea brokers are rich men, but, as in many other specialties, they have to pay for their success. --Troy Times.

THE AMERICAN LEXICOGRAPHER.

Dr. Webster was a true scion of the old New England stock. Upon his mother's side he was a descendant of William Bradford, the Plymouth Governor. The clever boys of New England families were then sent to college, and Noah Webster naturally entered Yale College in 1774. His studies were somewhat interrupted by the Revolution; but he succeeded in graduating. Afterward he taught school and studied law, being admitted to the bar in 1781. In 1782 he kept a classical school at Goshen, N. Y., and there "compiled two small elementary books for teaching the English language." In 1783 he published his "First Part of a Grammatical Institute of the English Language," followed in the course of the next two years by the second and third parts. The first part was the basis of the spelling-books which he afterward published. He had an idea that Americans should have school-books of their own, and he based his compilations upon this. He adhered to this when he published his reader, and many of the selections are from American writers and orators. His books were popular enough to make him feel the need of a copyright law, and to secure this by the legislation of the several States he studied assiduously, Congress under the Confederation having no power to protect literary property. It did not enact a copyright law until 1790. The spelling-book, as everybody knows, was enormously successful. In 1847 24,000,000 copies of the book had been published, the sale averaging 1,000,000 per annum. Upon this Dr. Webster received a premium of copyright of 5 mills a copy, and it was the profits arising from this book which, during the twenty years in which Dr. Webster was engaged upon the "American Dictionary," supported him and his family.—New York Tribune.

SMOKER'S CATARRH.

The British Medical Journal asserts that the local effect of tobacco on the mucous membrane of the nose, throat and ears is as predisposing to catarrhal diseases as is inefficient and insufficient clothing in the case of women—the fact being that such effect on the mucous membrane of the superior portion of the respiratory tract causes a more permanent relaxation and congestion than any other known agent. Therefore, as tobacco depresses the system while it is producing its pleasurable sensation, and as it prepares the mucous membrane to take on catarrhal inflammation from even slight exposure to cold, the Journal thinks it should require no further evidence to show that its use ought to be discontinued by every catarrhal patient.

THE wide spread fame of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup is justly won by its own merits, and the reputation it has gained has been secured by its universal use.

STRANGE STORY ABOUT SANTA ANNA.

Judge Major of Kentucky, relates the following story of Santa Anna, the Mexican Dictator: "Did you ever hear," he said, "that he was a Kentuckian?" I confessed that I never had. "Well, that is believed by many old people about Frankfort; I have heard it from boyhood. It is said that Santa Anna, afterward President of the Mexican Republic, was an illegitimate son of one Nat Sanders, of this county. While a youth he went to New Orleans on a flatboat and was never afterward heard from. When captured at San Jacinto, in 1836, he was brought through this place on his way to Washington, and was recognized by the Sanderses, who recognized him as their illegitimate and long-lost relative. He did not deny it. He spoke English like a Kentuckian, and with Kentucky accent. One of the Sanders had determined to kill him on account of the death of a relative in the massacre of the Alamo, but abandoned his purpose when he was convinced that they were blood relatives. The mother of Evan E. Settle, of Owenton, was a Sanderses, and he bears a marked resemblance to the pictures of Santa Anna. Larkin F. Sanders, representative from Carroll county to the present General Assembly, belongs to the family, as also did the noted George Sanders, who figured so prominently in politics during the administrations of Pierce and Buchanan.

Suddenly Weakened.

"I suffered with rheumatism of the back and hip for a number of years," said Mr. Thomas Morgan, Superintendent of Streets. "I was waited on by physicians, but they gave no permanent relief, and I resolved to try St. Jacobs Oil. My rheumatism weakened at the first attack of its great enemy, St. Jacobs Oil, and soon I was well."—Cincinnati Times-Star.

STATISTICS show that the direct loss to Germany by its emigration in sixty years has amounted to ten milliards of marks, or about two and a half milliards of dollars—more than twice the enormous sum of the war indemnity which Germany required of France at the conclusion of the late Franco-Prussian war, and the United States has been the gainer by what has been Germany's loss.

MR. MICHAEL ROBBETT, 77 Sargent street, Cahoes, N. Y., was cured of a very severely injured knee by St. Jacobs Oil, says the Rochester, N. Y., Sunday Herald.

CORINTH, MISS., April 2, 1877.

Capt. W. P. Ellis, Bailey Springs, Ala.:

Dear Sir—It gives me pleasure to state the result of the use of Bailey waters in my case. I had for several years been the victim of Chronic Diarrhœa. The exhausting discharges, and absence of assimilation of food, with painful ulceration of the bowels, had reduced me from vigorous health to an almost hopeless condition. My physician advised a trial of the celebrated Bailey waters. In a few days after my arrival the functions of the Liver and Kidneys were favorably affected, my digestion became comfortable, the irritable condition of the bowels disappeard, and a comforable state of health was soon established. This occured two years ago, and I have ever since enjoyed good health. I attribute my recovery entirely to the medical virtues of Bailey Springs. Very Respectfully,

D. S. MALONE.

The Mason & Hamlin Co.

At Milan, Italy, they have recently had a Musical Industrial Exhibition and Competition, under royal patronage; at which were collected and compared, during a period of several months, the largest number and greatest variety of musical instruments, old and new ever brought together. America was honored in the award to the Mason & Hamlin Organ Company of the highest medal, and the only one in this department. Considering that 250 awards were given, altogether, this distinction was very marked. It is a continuation of the triumphs of these famous organ makers at every one of the World's Fairs for fourteen years; to which there has been no exception.—The Manhattan.
